Abstract
Studies on maqasid al-shari’ah have been widely written and reviewed by researchers of Islamic law. Some have written about the maqasid al-shari’ah’s concept, the figures’ thought, and its application to various Islamic law and social issues. As a new study, maqasid al-shari’ah is widely studied in the context of renewing Islamic law, however little discuss about history of maqasid al-shari’ah and relations with usul al-fiqh. Because historically, the birth of maqasid al-shari’ah can’t be separated from development of usul al-fiqh through the scholars usul al-fiqh. As well as in terms of methodology, maqasid al-shari’ah have a close relationship with method istinbāt al-āhkām in usul al-fiqh, as qiyyās, maslahāh al-mursalāh, al-żārī‘ah and istihsān. While in terms of application, maqasid al-shari’ah together with usul al-fiqh namely departing from the proposition of naqīli (revelation) and ‘aqfi (reason) which is global and analyzes various opinions in deciding Islamic law. It’s just that usul al-fiqh is dominated by linguistic aspects, meanwhile the maqasid al-shari’ah emphasizes the divine aspect behind the law. That’s why to see relationships among maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh, this research uses library research method or literature review by researching the main sources which discusses about relations maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh, in terms of historical, methodological and applicative.

Introduction

Islamic law or which includes fiqh and fatwa are structured to answer various issues and problems that occur in the community, especially the Muslim community of the world. Because the various problems that exist in Muslim societies in the world are always developing, and cannot be solved only by interpreting the text contained in the Qur’an and Hadith as the main source of textual teachings of Islam. Although there are various verses in the Qur’an that state the completeness of the teachings of Islam, textual answers do not solve problems that develop in society. That is because there are different and changing situations and conditions. For this reason, it is necessary to have an interpretation of religious texts through ijtihad conducted by scholars, to answer the problems that occur in the middle of the Muslim community of the world. The instrument used by the ulama in formulating Islamic law always refers to the rules of fiqh, but the rules of usul al-fiqh are more dominant using the linguistic approach in exploring a law contained in religious texts. So, it is necessary to have a new alternative or renewal of usul al-fiqh as a governing science related to procedures in ʻistinbāt al-āhkām (excavation of law).

One of the new alternatives offered by contemporary scholars, to answer various problems that develop in society is the maqasid al-shari’ah approach. The maqasid al-shari’ah approach has the aim of promoting the values of social welfare in answering problems that develop in society. This is based on the argument, that maqasid al-shari’ah is able to reveal the various meanings, goals, and objectives of Islamic law.1 The maslahah aspect behind the Islamic presidency, which then formed the background of the emergence of a study discourse called maqasid al-shari’ah. Namely the objectives of Islamic good fortune that is both ta‘abbūdiyyah (the afterlife oriented) and ta‘aqqūliyyah (world-oriented). While usul al-fiqh as a science examines the procedures for extracting Islamic law from the arguments that exist, but rather only in language analysis. Even so, people who want to emigrate or explore Islamic law through Islamic legal sources, both agreed upon,2 or not agreed,3 it must understand usul al-fiqh as a main foundation in exploring a law through religious texts.

When viewed from the very beginning of the development of Islamic legal thought, the study of maqasid al-shari’ah is placed not too significantly in the study of the scholars. The scholars of usul al-fiqh (USHULIYIN) were limited to placing them in additional discussion in the laws of a school. More deeply, Islamic legal thinking has been bound by the attention of the scholars, in which the excavation of Islamic law is only associated with the study of usul al-fiqh and qawā‘id al-fiqh which is oriented to the text, not to the meaning contained behind a text. Whereas between usul al-fiqh, qawā‘id al-fiqh and maqasid al-shari’ah are three important things that are inseparable, developing and running in the same linear line. Because usul al-fiqh is a science that studies the methodology of determining Islamic law, while ḍawā‘id al-fiqh is the main foundation of Islamic law, while maqasid al-shari‘ah is the values, spirit, and spirit contained in Islamic law. So that the three aspects are interrelated and cannot leave each other in extracting an Islamic law.

As is known, the discussion of maqasid al-shari‘ah that is currently developing is directly focused on theory and practice, but not much is explained related to the history of the beginning, development, and birth of various theories until it becomes an alternative study in Islamic legal discourse. At least there are several studies that lead to the theme of the relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and usul al-fiqh, for example, written by Ali Mutakin in Hunafa Journal 2010 about the Maqasid Shari‘ah Theory and Its Relationship with the Istinbath Legal Method and Fatimah Halim in Legal Studies Journal 2017 who discusses the Relationship Between Maqasid Shari‘ah With Several Methods of Legal Determination. And from previous studies, there is not much mention of the history and application of maqasid al-shari‘ah. So that this research is deemed necessary to examine the relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah with usul al-fiqh through historical, methodological, and applicative aspects.

Research Method

This research is a qualitative study with data sources derived from literature review and information from scientific journals related to maqasid al-shari‘ah. To support the search for data in this study, various classic books and journal articles or writings of academics were also searched and directed towards this theme.

The historical relations of Maqasid al-Shari‘ah dan usul al-fiqh

The birth of maqasid al-shari‘ah cannot be separated from usul al-fiqh, because historically the maqasid al-shari‘ah was born from the womb of usul al-fiqh. So, to see the history of the journey regarding the study of maqasid al-shari‘ah, it is necessary to explain some scholars who have contributed to the study of maqasid al-shari‘ah. Attention to the maqasid al-shari‘ah actually existed before asy-Syatibi who is considered to be the father of the maqasid al-shari‘ah, even in the time of the Prophet. Hammādī al-Ubāydi mentions the first person to speak maqasid al-shari‘ah namely Ḥabrāmah al-Nakḥā ḫ (d. 96 AH), a person from ṭābisin ‘who says in every law of Allah SWT has a purpose namely benefit.4 But according to Jaser Audah, maqasid al-shari‘ah was already discussed in the time of Abu Bakar when codifying the Qur’an. After the Sahaba, maqasid theory and classification developed. However, the maqasid al-shari‘ah that we see and know as it is today is not so mature before the scholars of usul al-fiqh from the 5th AH to the 8th AH. However, in the first three centuries, the term hikmah was known, ‘īllah, munāsabah, ma‘ānī and already existed in the method of thinking of the scholars of Islamic law before, even using it.5

4 Hammadi Al-Ubaydi, Al-Syatibi Wa Maqasid Al-Syari‘Ah (Beiru: Dar Qutaybah, 1996), p. 134-135.

After al-Nakhā‘ī, Tirmidhī al-Hākim (d. 296 AH/908 AD), who wrote the first manuscript of the maqasid al-shari‘ah. Where the word “maqasid” is found in his al-Shalāh wa Maqāṣidūtha, which contains research on spiritual secrets and wisdom in every prayer and remembrance movement.6 In the 3rd century, there was Abū Zayd al-Balkhi (d. 322 AH/933M), who wrote the first manuscript of the maqasid al-shari‘ah in the field of mu‘amalah. His work, entitled al-Ibānah ‘an Usūl al-Diyānāh, is a work that traces the various objectives that lie behind Islamic law. The same work with the title Masālih al-‘Abdān wa al-Anfus, discusses how the practice of Islamic religion and its laws have a positive impact on physical and mental health.7

Then there is al-Qaffāl al-Kabīr al-Shāshī (d. 365 H / 975 AD), with the oldest work on the maqasid al-shari‘ah which is in the Dār al-Kutib Cairo of Egypt, with the title Mahāsīn al-Syār ‘i. A manuscript that discusses the rules, objectives, wisdom of the shari‘a. The composition of the discussion in the work, such as the composition of classical jurisprudence. Starting with thahārāh, ablution, and so on.8 The development of various concepts such as al-Darūrīyyāh, al-siyyāh, and al-makrūmāh by al-Qaffāl facilitate the way of al-Juwaini and al-Ghazali in developing the theory of shafi‘i Shi‘a and maqasid’s theory. The two scholars then put forward the concepts of al-Darūrīyyāh, al-hājjiyyāh, and al-taḥṣīnīyyāh.

After that, there was the Ibn Bawabayh al-Qummi (d. 381 AH / 991 CE). The leading and first scholars of the 4th AH from the Shafi‘ah circles, who studied the maqasid al-shari‘ah with his work I‘lālu al-Sharā‘i.9 The study of maqasid al-shari‘ah was then continued by al-Amirī al-Faylāṣūf (d. 381 AH / 991 M), through his work al-I‘lām bi Mānāqib al-Islām. Trying to examine the theoretical classification of Islamic sharia objectives related to al-Hudūd or criminal law in Islam. With the discussion of punishment for murderers, thieves, opening up the disgrace of others, and so forth. The discussion then became the inspiration of the ulama in formulating al-kulliyāh al-khomsah, namely protecting religion, soul, reason, descent, and wealth.10 After al-Qaffāl, there was a Abū Ja‘fār Muhammad ‘Alī (d. 381 AH) from al-Imāmiyyāh circles who study the law ‘through their work I‘lālu al-Sharā‘i.11 In the contiguous period, there was Abū Bakr ibn al-Ṭayyib al-Baqilāni (d. 403 AH) with his work al-Ahkām wa al-I‘lāl which combines kalam science with usul al-fiqh which resulted in the study of maqasid al-shari‘ah.12

The term maqasid al-shari‘ah then appears in the application of various methods of usul al-fiqh such as al-Qiyās, al- Istihsān and al-Maslāhah. Even so, maqasid al-shari‘ah has not been seen as part of the study of Islamic legal thinking in its own right. So that the development of the theory of "public needs" by al-Juwaini (d. 478 AH/1085 AD) in the 5th AH. The methods that existed until the 5th AH, were apparently unable to answer the problems of civilization that continued to develop. So then theories such as al-Maslāhah al-Mursālah emerge as a method that includes "what is not mentioned and which is behind the sacred texts". As for the scholars of usul al-fiqh who are the most influential in the theory of maqasid al-shari‘ah from the 5th AH to the 8th AH are the Abū al-Ma‘ālī al-Juwaini (d. 478 AH/1085 AD), Abū Hāmid al-Ghazālī (d. 505 AH/1111 AD), al-I‘zzu al-Dīn Ibn A‘budu al-Salam (d. 660 AH/1209 AD), Shihāb al-Dīn al-Qarāfī (d. 684 AH/1285 AD), Shamsuddin Ibn al-Qayyīm (d. 748 AH/1347 AD) and Abū Ishāq al-Shāṭibī (d. 790 AH/1388 AD).

Al-Juwainī as the originator of "the theory of public needs", wrote the book al-Burhān fī Usul al-Fiqh. Which is the work of usul al-fiqh first, discusses "levels of basic needs" or known as al-Darūriyyāh, al-Hājīyyāh, al-Tahsīniyyah. Al-Juwaini suggests 5 levels of maqasid al-shari‘ah, namely al-Darūrāh, al-Hājīyah, al-‘Ammah, al-Marrām, al-Mandūbah and what cannot be returned to a specific or clear purpose.13 As for al-Ghazālī as the originator of ‘levels of necessity’, developing the theory of al-Juwaini in his book al-Mustashfā. In the beginning to interpret maslahah as a method to attract benefits and reject damage in beings. In this case, the benefit of beings is the ultimate goal to be achieved. That way, the benefit is the same as maintaining the objectives of the shari‘ah. Which are the objectives of the shari‘ah in beings there are five kinds, namely guarding religion, guarding the soul, guarding the intellect, guarding offspring, and protecting property.14

After al-Ghazālī, there was the Fakhruddin al-Rāzī (d. 606 AH). Through his book al-Mahṣūl fī al-‘Ilmī al-‘usūl, there was a difference in the order of al-‘usūl al-khomsah by prioritizing guarding the soul over guarding religion.15 The next scholar was Abū ‘Abdullāh Muhammad Ibn ‘Abdul al-Rahmān (d. 546 AH), who wrote the book Mahāsīn al-Islām wa Sharā‘i al-Islām. Then there was al-I‘zzu al-Dīn Ibn ‘Abdu al-Salām (d. 660 AH/1209 CE), who wrote two books about the Maqāṣid. In it discusses the wisdom behind the rules of shari‘a, namely: Maqāṣid al-Ṣalāh and Maqāṣid al-Ṣaum. However, his major contributions in the theory of maqasid al-shari‘ah are found in the book of Qawā‘id al-Akhām fī Masālih al-Anām. After that, there was Najmu al-Dīn al-Ṭūfī (d. 716 AH), a scholar who caused much controversy and his ideas worried many scholars, because he gave a very large portion in the use of reason.16 Then there is Ibnū al-Taymiyyah (d. 728 AH), who has contributed to the study of maqasid al-shari'ah which was applied directly into his fatwas in the book of Majmū' al-Fatāwā al-Kubrā.\textsuperscript{17}

Next was Ibnu al-Qayyim al-Jauziyyah from the Hanbali school. With his criticisms of the practice of legal engineering or al-hiyāl (something that can be a medium to justify the unlawful and forbid the halal). Then there was Tājū al-Dīn as-Subkhi (d. 771 AH), with his work al-Jawāmi' which gives additional al-Darūriyyāh al-khomsāh by preserving honor (hifdz al-'ard).\textsuperscript{18} After that appeared Abū Ishāq al-Shāfi'ī Ibrāhīm bin Mūsā al-Mafīk (d. 790 AH / 1388 AD), the Ulama school of Islamic scholars who succeeded in composing the maqasid al-shari'ah to be the basis of Islamic law. Through al-Muwāfaqāt fi al-Ushūl al-Shari'ah, he succeeded in making a major contribution to the development of the maqasid al-shari'ah by transforming three important things; first, making maqasid al-shari'ah as legal principles. Second, making the maqasid al-shari'ah from a wisdom that is behind the rules become a basic rule. Third, the maqasid from uncertainty becomes a belief.\textsuperscript{19}

After the death of al-Shāfi'ī, the study of maqasid al-shari'ah experienced stagnation and then five centuries after it emerged the Ibnu `Ashūr (d. 1393 AH/1973 CE) through his work the Maqāṣīd al-Syarī‘ah al-Islāmiyyah trying to get maqāsid al-shari‘ah from usul al-fiqh into a new scientific discipline. This is done by Ibnu `Ashūr because the issues that are developing and current issues are more relevant to be studied with maqāsid al-shari‘ah.\textsuperscript{20} In addition to Ibnu `Ashūr, there is also Ihlāṣ al-Fāsi'ī from Morocco (d.1974 AD) who wrote Maqāṣid al-Shari‘ah al-Islāmiyyah wa Makārimuhā.

In the current era, maqāsid al-shari‘ah is widely studied by observers of Islamic law and Islamic law such as Hasan al-Turābī, Jaser Audah, Ahmad al-Raysuni, Muhammad Khalid Mas‘ud, Jamaluddin al-Athiyyah, Yusuf al-Qardhawi, Abdul Majid Najjar, Abdullah bin Bayyah, Abdullah Ahmad an-Na‘im, KH. Sahal Mahfudh, KH. Ali Yafie and other scholars. In addition, the studies of maqāsid al-shari‘ah have developed in many countries which are predominantly of the maliki school, although in the beginning the studies of the maqāsid al-shari‘ah have been formulated by many scholars who are of the shafi‘i school.

Methodological relations of Maqāsid al-Shari‘ah and Usul al-fiqh

Maqāsid al-shari‘ah was developed as a method aimed at realizing the achievement of the ultimate goal of the stipulation, and implementation of the Islamic law that is the benefit of mankind. In this case, the purpose of the methodology of maqāsid al-shari‘ah is to explore the ‘illah and wisdom behind a law, with the theoretical building of maslahah and al-Kulliyah al-khomsah. Maqāsid al-shari‘ah as a method still remains through the ulama opinion search approach, using inductive research, excavation of the ‘illah and wisdom of the law, the use of al-Kulliyah al-Khomsah, synergizing the norms, determining the benefit. It's just that the substance of meaning through the method of maqasid al-shari’ah refers to shari’a characteristics that liberate and spread benefit, according to the principles of moderation (tawassuth), tolerance (tasammuh), balance (taawuzun), ease (taysir), and other principles of moderation (tawassuth), tolerance (tasammuh), and other principles which is directly proportional to the nature and clear logic as a consideration of the tasyri’ process.21 The maqasid al-shari’ah method is also based on the existence of the greatest, most powerful, and strong benefit with the main reference to the arguments of naqli, to the results of studies that have been carried out. This is so that the existing benefit covers all layers, both general and special.

The benefit to be realized in Islamic law is divided into two namely the world and the hereafter. With three levels of needs, namely al-darariyyah, al-hājiyyah and al-tahsiniyyah.22 It is through this purpose of benefit that the maqasid al-shari’ah has a close relationship with usul al-fiqh in methodological terms, as mentioned by ‘Abdullah bin Bayyah in his book ‘Alāqah al-Maqāsid al-Shari’ah bi al-Uṣūl al-fiqh. There are at least 20 discussions that discuss the close relationship of maqasid al-shari’ah with usul al-fiqh.23 Because the end of the objectives set and the application of Islamic law is to realize the human benefit in the world and the hereafter. So maqasid al-shari’ah must be known by the mujtahid in the context of developing Islamic law and answering legal issues that have not been clearly regulated by the Qur’an and Hadith. More than that, maqasid al-shari’ah must be known to determine whether a law, especially human interaction (mu’amalah) can be applied or not when there is a change in society starting from social structure, conditions, and others.

As for the relationship between maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh, it can be seen through several legal methods that mediate the creation of maqasid al-shari’ah, such as the ta’lili method with qiyas and its istihsan focusing on the ‘illah to achieve the istislahi method on maslahah through maslahah al-mursalah and al-żari’ah (sadd al-żari’ah and fath al-żari’ah).

The usul al-fiqh expert (usuliyyun) gives the definition of qiyas in a variety of meanings. Where the core meaning of qiyas is to equate a law whose problem does not exist in the text (nash) with a law whose problems are contained in the text, because of the similarity of ‘Illah law.24 ‘Illah law for most usul al-fiqh experts becomes the core point in performing qiyas. But some of the schools of Hanafi and Hanbali differ from the majority of the scholars of usul al-fiqh, such as Ibnu Taymiyyah and Ibnu Qayyim Jawziyyah who say qiyas are very dependent on the wisdom.25 In line with them, al-Shatibi said that ‘illah is a wisdom (hikmah) in the form of being and not having a maslahah or mafsadah especially when it has to do with the stipulation of an order, prohibition, whether explicit or not. Because for al-Shatibi, "ʻillah" is none other than maslahah and mafsadah, so that in the view of al-Shatibi the determination of the law can be based on hikmah not 'illah.

The devising judgment (Istīnbāt al-Ahkām) method with qiyyas and maslahah al-mursalah, as well as others, is the method used to realize Islamic law reform. In this case, it can be linked to or use the maqasid al-shari‘ah approach which is the basis for realizing the benefits to be achieved by Islamic law. For example, the use of qiyyas in usul al-fiqh, which is usually used to establish a law whose problem does not exist in nash by equating the problems that exist in the text, because of the equality of ‘illah. Therefore, the use of qiyyas must fulfill four elements, namely al-Ashlu, al-far‘u, al-hukmu al-āshi and ‘illah. Of the four elements, the position of "‘illah" ranks the most important because there is and there is no law in a new case, it depends on the presence and absence of "‘illah".26 ‘Illah can be used as the basis for establishing a law on a new case because it has basic aspects of maslahah and mafsadah. An example is the law of cannabis which is unclean because it is intoxicating and can damage the mind, equated with the law of wine (khamr) which has an intoxicating and intrusive nature. Intoxicating and corrupting the mind is ‘illah which makes unclean and various other examples. So, in considering a law, it cannot be separated from the aspects of maslahah and mafsadah that exist. From the explanation above, there is a relation between maqasid al-shari‘ah with qiyyas found in the ‘illah section.

Because maqasid al-shari‘ah is part of the continuity of ‘illah a law. Therefore, maqasid al-shari‘ah not only talks about the laws that are set but also why those laws are determined. So, the scholars say that maqasid al-shari‘ah has a relationship with usul al-fiqh, in this case with the qiyyas method and more specifically related to ‘illah, because one of the pillars of qiyyas is ‘illah. Therefore, this is the essence of the relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and usul al-fiqh.27

The next method is istihsan. Which etymologically means to think something is good. While understanding the terminology means many variants of meaning. Among them are those raised by al-Sarakhsi, as follows; istihsan is to leave the qiyyas by practicing other qiyyas, because they are considered to be stronger than him with the existence of a demanding proposition and compatibility with the benefit of humans.28 And basically, the istihsan is a displacement from the al-qiyyās al-jāli (the clear qiyyas ‘illah) to the al-qiyyās al-khāfi (qiyyas that are vague ‘illahs) due to several things, such as the use of clear qiyyas with ‘illah, but whose effects are unclear but have an obvious but ineffectual impact, but have an obvious effect but have an obvious but not effective effect, but have an obvious impact but have an obvious but not effective impact, but have a clear impact but have an obvious but not effective effect. The use of qiyaṣ khāfī whose ʻillah is not very clear but the impact caused is effective. 29 One example is the endowment of agricultural land. If seen from the perspective of qiyaṣ jāli, this waqf can be likened to a sale and purchase agreement. Because in buying and selling the main thing is the transfer of ownership rights from the seller to the buyer, so that the irrigation rights and making the channel for irrigation do not exist. However, if seen from the perspective of qiyaṣ khāfī, the waqf case is equated with leasing. So that the transfer of use rights also benefits from the owner of the goods to the renter. Likewise, waqf, the most important thing is how the goods can be used, and bring maslahah.

So methodologically, istiḥsan is an alternative in solving problems that cannot be solved using qiyaṣ. Due to the use of qiyaṣ, it is not in accordance with the interests desired by the community or does not affect the existence of maslahah. In this case, there is a very close relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and istiḥsan as a method that is in usul al-fiqh. Namely, the existence of a process of moving the law to another law, because it is considered to be stronger or strengthen one of the propositions to other stronger propositions. Such a function is a concept of istiḥsan, which actually also implicitly exists in the maqasid al-shari‘ah. 30

The relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and usul al-fiqh in terms of the next method is found in the istiṣlahi method. The method is a method in the approach of determining the law, the problem of which is not clearly regulated in the Qur‘an and Hadith and this method puts more emphasis on the aspects of maslahah directly. There are at least two methods developed under the istiṣlahi method, namely maslahah al-mursalah and al-ţari‘ah (sadd al-ţari‘ah and fath al-ţari‘ah).

The nature of maslahah al-mursalah is any benefit that is included in the purpose of shari‘ without any proof that justifies or cancels. 31 The concept of maslahah al-mursalah as a method of determining the law, in its operation, emphasizes the aspects of maslahah directly. So, in this case, when viewed in terms of legality, ʻillah is divided into three, namely. 32

First, maslahah al-mu‘tabarah. Maslahah whose existence is strengthened by the existence of the sharia text. That is, the text with the form ʻillah in it states that something is considered as maslahah. Like the fatwa of Umar bin Khattab about the punishment for the drinkers. Wherein drinkers have to be beaten 80 times. This is then analogous to the maslahah whose existence is considered to be al-mu‘tabarah, or to someone who accuses others of adultery. 33 Second, maslahah al-mulghah. Namely maslahah whose legality is rejected and contradicts the Shariah text. Or something that according to humans maslahah, but the text of the sharia rejects and denies these maslahah. An example is the fatwa of a fiqhi expert (fāqih) regarding the punishment of a king who has intercourse during the day of Ramadan, by fasting two months in a row instead of freeing slaves. In view of the fāqih, freeing slaves would not have a deterrent effect on the king. Third, maslahah al-mursalah. Namely, maslahah whose legality is not supported and not rejected by the shari‘a texts. In the sense that a benefit which position does not have the support of the shari‘a text and does not get a clear rejection of the shari‘a text. For example, when Abu Bakar ordered his companions to codify the Qur’an into a Manuscripts. But this was never done by the Prophet Muhammad in his lifetime. Abu Bakar’s argument for doing this was for the benefit of keeping the Qur’an from extinction and keeping its worries awake because at that time many friends who memorized the Qur’an died. From this explanation, there is a relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and the maslahah method in usul al-fiqh, namely the similarity of theories between the two, which discuss maslahah. So that the relationship between maqasid al-shari‘ah and māslāhāh is in the same theory that both of them are about the maslahah al-dā‘ūrīyyah, al-hājīyyah, al-tahṣīnīyyah. Which of these three things lead to one goal, namely the benefit which is the core of the study of usul al-fiqh and maqasid al-shari‘ah.34

The al-ṣarī‘ah means what is the media or intermediary (wasīlah) and the path to something.35 If related to Islamic law, al-ṣarī‘ah is divided into two, namely sadd al-ṣarī‘ah and fath al-ṣarī‘ah. Sadd al-ṣarī‘ah is blocking an intermediary so that it does not become damaged or minimize the impact that brings damage. While fath al-ṣarī‘ah means to take or use an intermediary if the intermediary can bring maslahah to be achieved.36 Therefore, al-ṣarī‘ah in its use can be mandatory, sunnah, makruh and may be opened and closed, because only as an intermediary. If the intermediary leads to an unlawful thing, then it becomes unlawful to open it. Likewise, if it leads to something that is mandatory, then it must also open it. One example of fath al-ṣarī‘ah is the compulsory law of Friday prayers so that leaving all activities at that time must be left. Whereas the example of al-ṣarī‘ah, for example, excludes Friday prayers in the middle of the COVID-19 exhibit to break the chain of the spread of the deadly virus.

So that the basis for whether al-ṣarī‘ah should be opened or closed is the existence of the goals of action, which have a connection with it.37 From this explanation, al-ṣarī‘ah is more directed towards efforts to prevent the possibility of damage and to the maximum extent possible try to attract a benefit. Therefore, maqasid al-shari‘ah has a relationship with al-ṣarī‘ah contained in usul al-fiqh. From a few brief explanations above, it shows that maqasid al-shari‘ah has a close relationship with usul al-fiqh. In addition, maqasid al-shari‘ah also has a close relationship with other sciences, such as Islamic philosophy, social science, and so on. It is this connection with other sciences that then gives rise to various opinions regarding the relationship of maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh. In this case, the relationship between maqasid al-shari’ah and al-żari’ah lies in the purpose or outcome or result. The aim of the maqasid al-shari’ah is to realize the benefit and prevent damage. Likewise, with al-żari’ah whose ultimate goal is to achieve benefit and avoid damage.38

Relative application of Maqasid al-Shari’ah and Usul al-fiqh

The motivation of Islamic jurists to discuss maqasid al-shari’ah is to mediate the gap between Islamic law and global challenges and respond to the stagnation of usul al-fiqh. Because usul al-fiqh is considered helpless when dealing with global and modern issues.39 However, in the application, both maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh are both sourced from the argument of al-ijmālī or al-kullī (global), not from the argument of tafsīlī (detail). The proposition ijmālī are general rules that have not been related to any case or propositions that are still global.

The kullī-ijmālī proposition thus is a global proposition that does not clearly indicate the designation of certain laws. Instead, it shows instructions that indicate several laws to continue to be relevant to the development of society. For example, the kullī argument, for example, is a text of revelation that contains a ban on annihilation. Text like this does not refer to the provisions of certain events, but rather includes various legal events that contain the damage. Therefore, there are a number of immeasurable events whose legal allotment is based on the text of revelation like this.40 The proposition itself means instructions41 or performances.42 Therefore, it can be concluded that the proposition is a clue to something so that something can be known. According to ‘Abdul Wahab Khalaf, that argument is something that can be relied upon by using shahīh (true) reasons on sharia law that is operation (amaliyah), both qāṭ’ī or dzanni.43 For this reason, the argument kullī is proof that shows the laws that are still global, both derived from the Qur’an and hadith.

In principle, the law is not born for itself but works for the benefit of society. To bring about benefit in a substantive sense, it is necessary to articulate revelation and reason in formulating the legal provisions needed by the evolving reality of society. All legal provisions are actually based on the very transcendental propositions of revelation. However, verbal revelations, in general, express the problem in macro and outline. Because of that, the involvement of logic and reason ijtihad or istinbāt cannot be avoided. The revelations that govern macro issues in the terminology of Islamic jurisprudence are called the propositions kulli or ijmāli (global). While the revelations that reveal detailed problems called the argument juz‘i or tafsīli (detail).44 Where the existence of the proposition is to cover the use of logic and logic of ijtihad in formulating legal provisions at the operational level.

Then if maqasid al-shari‘ah is interpreted as wisdom, then the excavation is to conduct a study of the arguments of ijmāli, by raising questions as to what, what is the purpose, what is the purpose of establishing law.45 Whereas if maqasid al-shari‘ah is the continuation of the logic of the law. Then look for ‘illah through al-imā‘, al-imā‘u wa al-tanzih, which is the inclusion of the character in law and is mentioned in laflat (pronunciation). If the inclusion is not as ‘*illah, then the inclusion does not mean anything. The next step through alsibru wa al-taqsīm is testing, classification, and determination of God. Likewise through mnasabah, namely research on the purpose of law, through tanqih al-manā‘ (retouching and modalities), which determines one of the attributes as ‘illah, through al-‘ardu, al-sibr, dawrān, and ilghā al-Fāriq.46 Every law is always there ‘*illah and purpose, every anything that has become a legal provision there must be ‘*illah law and its purpose and benefit.47 Every maqasid al-shari‘ah must use the proposition, there is no mention of the maqasid al-shari‘ah unless accompanied by an argument.48

So maqasid al-shari‘ah is a unity with the language rules in usul al-fiqh. Because it cannot work alone, it is parallel to the approach of laflatziyyāh or linguistic (qawā‘idh al-Uṣūliyyāh al-Lughāwīyyāh and ta‘arrud al-Adillāh). The maqasid at the level of the ma‘nawi is maslahah, ‘urf, istihsan, al-zari‘ah. If there are general rules in shari‘a about al-‘īrriyyāh (primary), al-hājiyyāh (secondary), or al-taḥṣiniyyāh (tertiary), then it cannot be annulled with particular propositions. Likewise, the general rules of shari‘a or particularity must be maintained together. Because the particular form is also desired in order to uphold the proposition kulli, so that the argument kulli is not left behind which causes the desired benefit to be lost. Then there must be truth maqasid to produce particular propositions. Some of these questions are not more important than others. So that the objectives of sharia can be obtained from all of them. That’s what you want to look for.49 So that the person who takes the juz‘ī text and ignores the kulli goals is lost or wrong. Likewise, people who take the kulli text and ignore the juz‘ī text are also wrong. This all assures us that what is demanded is to preserve the objectives of shar‘i because the proposition kulli and juz‘ī, both referring to the intention of the shar‘i, so that both must be held in punishing every problem.50

The concept of maqasid al-shari'ah has a function as a stylist and disciplinarian in the method of establishing Islamic law from the shar'i proposition or commonly called isticðlal, not as a tool to avoid the law let alone annul it. Therefore, the existence of the principle kulli cannot annul things that are particular, because it functions as a stylist and disciplinarian in carrying out isticðlal and ijtihad. Whereas the subject of the study of usul al-fiqh according to Wahbah al-Zuhaili are the postulates or sources of general sharia law which are used in finding global rules and sharia law extracted from the arguments. However, various propositions in Islamic sharia have explained that each Sharia law has a specific purpose, namely to realize the benefit of humans in this world and the hereafter. So maqasid al-shari'ah has a position as a benchmark in assessing and seeing things, that understanding a law must be in line with the intentions outlined by the legislator namely for benefit. Because both Usul al-fiqh and maqasid al-shari'ah have the basic goal of regulating ijtihad and guiding faqih in efforts to reduce the law from its global sources. This is the meeting point between maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh in terms of its application, which both depart from the proposition of ijmali or kulli in the sense of a global proposition. And as a regulator in terms of isticðlal and ijtihad a law.

One example of a meeting point between maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh in terms of its application is the LBM PBNU Religious View of the Implementation of Friday Prayers in Covid-19 Infected Areas. Containing the practice of Friday prayers and Jama’ah prayers in the midst of the outbreak of Covid 19 and the practice of worship can be removed by replacing the midday prayer by referring to the legal proposition, the opinion of scholars, the opinion of ‘*illah’, and al-Kulliyyah al-Khomsah.

Conclusion

Maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh are two sides of one currency, which are theoretically different but cannot be separated from each other. That is because usul al-fiqh becomes the initial foundation to find out more detailed about the legal arguments that are ijmali and maqasid al-shari'ah as sustainability in analyzing legal arguments. Historically, the emergence of maqasid al-shari'ah cannot be separated from usul al-fiqh. It can be seen that the themes discussed in the maqasid al-shari'ah are themes that were studied and written by the scholars of usul al-fiqh. Whereas the relationship between maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh from a methodological point of view is the continuation of the ‘illah law, which is in the ijtihad through both through qiyas, istihsan, maslahah al-mursalah and al-żari'ah. As for its application, between maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh are both sourced from the argument of ijmali, namely the proposition that is still global, not the argument that has been detailed in explaining a law. As for the separation between the studies of maqasid al-shari'ah and usul al-fiqh conducted by scholars, usul al-fiqh is a relative separation and not a separation of haqiqi. Maqasid al-shari'ah is part of the usul al-fiqh because its birth is the implication of the study of maslahah that was developed and made theory in the maqasid al-shari’ah. While from a methodological point of view, maqasid al-shari’ah is part of usul al-fiqh because the methods used have a close relationship with the methods available in usul al-fiqh. In this case, taqasid al-shari’ah is still a compliment or a supporter of the methods that already exist in usul al-fiqh. While in terms of its application, between maqasid al-shari’ah and usul al-fiqh both departed to combine the purpose of the law with the reason for the birth of the law, besides that it also departed from the inductive collectivity of the proposition.
