Like many of the contributors to this volume, I had the great fortune to have Professor Sanderson as the supervisor of my doctoral thesis, which was a critical edition of an early text on haṭhayoga called the Khecarīvidyā. At the outset of my work on the text, and for several subsequent years, I expected that Sanderson’s encyclopedic knowledge of the Śaiva corpus would enable us to find within it forerunners of khecarīmudrā, the haṭhayogic practice central to the Khecarīvidyā. However, notwithstanding a handful of instances of teachings on similar techniques, the fully-fledged practice does not appear to be taught in earlier Śaiva works. In subsequent years, as I read more broadly in the corpus of early texts on haṭhayoga (which, in comparison to the vast Śaiva corpus, is relatively small and thus may easily be read by one individual), I came to the realisation that almost all of the practices which distinguish haṭhayoga from other methods of yoga were unique to it at the time of their codification and are not to be found in the corpus of earlier Śaiva texts, despite repeated assertions in secondary literature that haṭhayoga was a development from Śaivism (or “tantra” more broadly conceived).

The texts of the haṭhayoga corpus do, however, couch their teachings in tantric language. The name of the haṭhayogic khecarīmudrā, for example, is also that of an earlier but different Śaiva practice. When I was invited to speak at the symposium in Professor Sanderson’s honour held in Toronto in 2015, I decided to try to articulate my rather inchoate thoughts on this subject by presenting a paper entitled “Haṭhayoga’s Śaiva Idiom.” The inadequacy of my theories was brought home to me some months after the symposium when I started to read, together with two other former students of Sanderson, Péter-Dániel Szántó and Jason Birch, a twelfth-century manuscript of the Amṛtasiddhi (AS), the earliest text to teach many of the key principles and practices of hathayoga. I had already read much of the text with Sanderson and others, but only from later manuscript sources. As we read the older manuscript it gradually became clear that the Amṛtasiddhi was composed in a Vajrayāna (tantric Buddhist) milieu.

Thus my notion of hathayoga having a Śaiva idiom needed readdressing. One might perhaps talk instead of its “tantric idiom.” But I shall leave reflections on that topic for a later date and in this short paper focus on the Amṛtasiddhi and, in particular, the features of it which make it clear that it was composed in a Vajrayāna milieu. I am currently preparing a critical edition and annotated translation of the text with Dr Szántó; what follows here results from our work in progress. Despite our edition being incomplete, I am confident that the conclusion drawn here about the origins of the text is sound (and that further work on the text will provide additional and complementary evidence) and I think it important enough to warrant preliminary publication. Subsequent publications will address this unique text’s many other remarkable features.

1 The Amṛtasiddhi

The importance of the Amṛtasiddhi was first brought to scholarly attention by Kurtis Schaeffer in an article published in 2002. Here I shall reprise as little of his rich and dense article as is necessary to provide the background to what follows. Schaeffer focuses on the twelfth-century manuscript of the text, photodocuments of printouts from a microfilm copy of this manuscript. Schaeffer also kindly shared his draft edition of the Tibetan translation of the Amṛtasiddhi given in this witness. We read the manuscript together with a collation of other witnesses, including a transcription of the Grantha manuscript M2 prepared by Viswanath Gupta, whom I thank for his assistance. Concerning manuscript sigla for the Amṛtasiddhi, please refer below to the section “Witnesses of the Amṛtasiddhi.”

2 I thank Professors Kurtis Schaeffer and Leonard van der Kuijp for sharing with me photographs of printouts from a microfilm copy of this manuscript. Schaeffer also kindly shared his draft edition of the Tibetan translation of the Amṛtasiddhi given in this witness. We read the manuscript together with a collation of other witnesses, including a transcription of the Grantha manuscript M2 prepared by Viswanath Gupta, whom I thank for his assistance. Concerning manuscript sigla for the Amṛtasiddhi, please refer below to the section “Witnesses of the Amṛtasiddhi.”

3 Prior to Schaeffer’s article, the only mention of the text of which I am aware (other than in manuscript catalogues) is Gode 1954, 22, in which its citations in the Yogacintāmani are noted.

4 Schaeffer (2002, 757) says that the manuscript’s colophon gives a date which “may read 1159 C.E.” The reading is clear: ekāśītijute [ṣute] is Newar scribal dialect for Sanskrit ṣute [ṣute] sāke sahasraikīte tu phālgune [kṣnāstanyām samāpto ‘yam kṛtvamṛtasiddhir mayā || (f.37v)]. The eighth day of the dark fortnight of the lunar month of Phālguna in Śāka 1081 corresponds to March 2nd 1160 C.E (according to the calculator at http://www.cc.kyoto-su.ac.jp/yanom/pancanga/). It is possible that the colophon has been copied from an examplar and that the manuscript itself does not date to 1160. The manuscript’s Tibetan colophon says that the Tibetan translation is that of the “monk of the Bya [clan]” (Bya ban de) Pad ma ‘od zer, who tographs of printouts from a microfilm of which he and Leonard van der Kuijp have kindly shared with me. At the time that the microfilm was made, the manuscript was in Beijing, although Schaeffer believes that it has since been returned to Tibet. The manuscript is unique in that it is bilingual, with three registers: the Sanskrit text in a Nepali or east Indian script, a transliteration of the Sanskrit in Tibetan hand-printing script and a translation into Tibetan in the Tibetan cursive script.

This manuscript is referred to in what follows by the siglum C. The other witnesses of the text which have been collated are considerably later than C (the oldest is perhaps the c. 17th-century K₁). They present versions of the text in which redaction has removed or obscured some of the Buddhist features evident in C. These witnesses may be divided into two groups. The first is a single Grantha manuscript from the Mysore Government Oriental Library (M₂), the second seven north Indian and Nepali manuscripts, two from Jodhpur’s Maharaja Man Singh Pustak Prakash (J₁ and J₂ = J) and four from the Nepal-German Manuscript Preservation Project (K₁–K₄ = K).⁶

The text of the Amṛtasiddhi consists of 303 verses divided into 35 short vivekas.⁷ The first ten vivekas teach the constituents of the yogic body. Vivekas 11–13 teach three methods of manipulating those constituents (mahāmudrā, mahābandha and mahāvedha) and viveka 14 teaches the practice (abhyāsa), i.e. how the three methods are to be used together. Vivekas 15–18 teach the four grades of aspirant, 19–33 the four states (avasthās) of yoga, and 34–35 the final transformation of the body leading up to nirvāṇa.⁸ worked towards the end of the eleventh century, which provides us with an earlier terminus ante quem for the text than the date of the manuscript itself.

⁵ As noted in the manuscript’s Tibetan colophon, the translation is of a different recension of the Sanskrit text from that given in the manuscript. At some places, e.g. 7.10 and 7.26, the translation corresponds to the text as found in the other witnesses, but not that in C.

⁶ Full details of these witnesses are given at the end of this article.

⁸ Vivekas 19–35 are interspersed with very short chapters on a variety of topics. In the first viveka (vv. 10–13) there is a list of the topics to be taught in the text. The list corresponds exactly to the vivekas up to viveka 19, but then goes awry. More analysis is needed to be sure, but it seems likely that at least some of the viveka divisions after 19 are later additions to the text.
The Amṛtasiddhi in the Haṭhayoga Tradition

2.1 Citations and Borrowings

The Amṛtasiddhi is a seminal work in the haṭhayoga textual tradition.\(^9\) Schaeffer (2002, 518–519) mentions its citations in the Yogacintāmaṇi (c. 1600 CE)\(^10\) and Haṭhapradīpikājyotsnā (1837 CE).\(^11\) In addition, several haṭhayoga texts borrow directly from the Amṛtasiddhi without attribution. The c. 13th-century Gorakṣaśataka shares three half-verses with it.\(^12\) The Vivekamārtaṇḍa, which is also likely to date to the 13th century redacts four of the Amṛtasiddhi’s verses into three.\(^13\) The c. 14th-century Amarauğhaprabodha shares six verses with the Amṛtasiddhi and paraphrases it extensively elsewhere.\(^14\) The Gorakṣayogaśāstra (15th century or earlier) borrows two and a half verses\(^15\) and extensively paraphrases other parts of the text. The c. 15th-century Śivasamhitā is much the biggest borrower from the Amṛtasiddhi, sharing 34 verses with it.\(^16\) The Haṭhapradīpikā shares five half-verses with the Amṛtasiddhi, but these may be borrowed from the Amarauğhaprabodha since all the shared passages are also in that text.\(^17\)

2.2 Doctrinal Innovations

Several of the Amṛtasiddhi’s teachings have no prior attestation and are central to teachings on haṭhayoga in later texts, where they are either reproduced ver-

\(^9\) Despite the compound haṭhayoga being found in earlier Vajrayāna works (Birch 2011, 535–536) and its teachings being central to later hathayogic texts, the Amṛtasiddhi does not call its yoga method haṭha. This paradox will be addressed in subsequent publications.

batim, as noted above, or incorporated into new compositions. These may be summarised as follows.

1. The Yogic Body

   a. The Amṛtasiddhi is the first text to relocate to the body the old tantric triad of sun, moon and fire.\(^{18}\) The idea of a moon in the skull dripping amṛta is found in many earlier tantric works, but that of the sun in the stomach consuming it is new, as is the conflation of the sun and fire.

   i. The Moon

   meruṣṛṅge sthitaś candro dviraṣṭakalayā yutaḥ aharniśaṃ tuṣārābhāṃ sudhāṃ varṣaty adhomukhaḥ
   ||3.1||

   The moon is on the peak of Meru and has sixteen digits. Facing downwards, it rains dewy nectar day and night.

   ii. The Sun

   madhyamāmūlasaṃsthāne tiṣṭhati sūryamaṇḍalaḥ kalādvādaśasampūrṇo dīpyamanāh svaraśmibhiḥ īrdhvaṃ vahati dakṣena tīkṣnamārtiḥ prajāpatiḥ vyānopiti sakalamḥ deham nādyākāśapathāśritaḥ grasati candranirvāsaṃ bhramati vāyumaṇḍale daḥati sarvadhātūṃś ca sūryah sarvaśarīrake
   ||4.3||

   (1) The sphere of the sun is at the base of the Central Channel, complete with twelve digits, shining with its rays. (2) The lord of creatures (Prajāpati), of intense appearance, travels upwards on the right. Staying in the pathways in the spaces (ākāśapatha)\(^{19}\) in the channels it pervades the entire body. (3) The sun consumes the lunar secretion, wanders in the sphere of the wind and burns up all the bodily constituents in all bodies.

   iii. Fire

   kalābhir daśabhīr yuktah sūryamaṇḍalamadhyataḥ vasati vastideśe ca vahinir annavipācakah
   ||5.1||

---

\(^{18}\) This triad is mentioned at Niśvāsatattvasaṃhitā Nayasūtra 4.147 and in many subsequent tantric works.

\(^{19}\) This is a śleṣa: ākāśapatha can also mean the sun's orbit in the sky.

b. The use of the word bindu for semen, bindu’s identification with the amṛta dripping from the moon, its preservation being essential for life and its division into male and female are all innovations of the Amṛtasiddhi which are widely adopted in later haṭhayoga texts.

i. adhaś candrāmṛtaṃ yāti tadā mṛtyur nṛnāṃ bhavet ||4.11||

(8) Know bindu to be of two kinds, male and female. Semen (bīja) is said to be the male [bindu] and rajas (female generative fluid) is female. (g) As a result of their external union people are created. When they are united internally, then one is declared a yogi. (10) Bindu resides in Kāmarūpa in the hollow of the multi-storied palace (kūṭāgārasya). Through pleasurable contact at Pūrṇagiri it travels along the Central Channel. (11) Rajas resides in the great sacred field in the perineal region (yonīmadhye). It is as red as a javā flower and is supported by the Goddess element (devītattvasamādhṛtam). (12) Know bindu to be made of the moon and rajas to be made of the sun. Their union is to be brought about in the very inaccessible multi-storeyed palace.

c. A connection between the mind and breath is taught as early as the Chāndogya Upaniṣad (6.8.2). The Amṛtasiddhi is the first text to teach that mind, breath and bindu are connected, a notion found in many subsequent hāṭhayoga texts.

\text{calaty ayaṃ yadā vāyus tadā binduś calaḥ smṛtaḥ}\ |
\text{binduś calati yasyāyaṃ cittaṃ tasyaiva cañcalam} ||7.17||

It is taught that when the breath moves bindu moves; the mind of he whose bindu is moving is restless.

d. The three granthis.

The Amṛtasiddhi’s system of three granthis, brahma°, viṣṇu° and rudra°, which are situated along the central channel of the body and are to be pierced by the mahāvedha (13.10–11), is very common in subsequent hāṭhayoga texts.22

20 On the kūṭāgāra, see below, p. 418.
21 The bright red javā flower (Hibiscus rosa-sinensis L.), popularly known as the China Rose, is common throughout south, southeast and east Asia.
22 Granthis are mentioned in many earlier Śaiva texts, some of whose lists include brahma, viṣṇu and rudra granthis but not in the Amṛtasiddhi’s configuration. See e.g. Kubjikā-
2. The three practices, mahāmudrā, mahābandha, mahāvedha (vivekas 11–13).

These practices, which involve bodily postures and breath control, are used to make the breath enter the central channel and rise upwards. They are an innovation of the Amṛtasiddhi and are taught in all subsequent haṭhayoga texts, albeit sometimes with different names.

3. The four avasthās

The four avasthās, “states” or “stages” of yoga practice (ārambha, ghaṭa, paricaya, nispanna/nispatti) introduced in the Amṛtasiddhi (vivekas 19–33), are taught in many Sanskrit haṭhayoga texts; they are also mentioned in the old Hindi Gorakhbāṇī (śabds 136–139).

In addition to these innovations, in viveka 14 (abhyāsa, “practice”) the Amṛtasiddhi describes, at a level of detail unparalleled in other texts, the internal processes brought about by its methods, in particular the movement of the breaths.

3 Buddhist Features of the Amṛtasiddhi

In Schaeffer’s analysis of the Amṛtasiddhi (2002, 521–524), he notes how it is unique amongst Tibetan Buddhist works because its teachings are said to bestow jīvanmukti, “liberation while living,” and make the yogi identical with Śiva. Despite these Śaiva features, however, close reading of manuscript C, the twelfth-century bilingual witness of the text, shows that the text was composed within a Vajrayāna milieu. Furthermore, it pits its teachings against those of other Vajrayāna schools, not Śaiva ones.

As can be seen in the examples given below, manuscript C generally has the best readings of the text and presents its Buddhist teachings intact. In the other manuscripts the specifically Buddhist doctrines found in C are either unwittingly included, misunderstood (and sometimes presented in corrupt forms as a result) or deliberately changed or omitted.

Some of the text’s Buddhist features are ambiguous or obscure enough for them to have been preserved by the redactors of the text as presented in the later witnesses. Thus we find multiple examples of Vajrayāna (or more broadly Buddhist) terminology such as mahāmudrā (viveka 11 and 31), vajrapañjara (7.26d), jñānasaṃbhāra (6.9c, 20.2bc), śūnya (8.2a, 8.8d, 8.10d, 19.15a, 20.7b, matatantra 17.61–84, in which there are sixteen granthis and Netratantra 7.22–25, in which there are twelve.
The Amṛtasiddhi: Ṣaṭṭha’s Tantric Buddhist Source Text

25.1c, nispanna (19.2c, 31.1c) and abhiṣeka (13.15a). Similarly, Amṛtasiddhi 7.4 mentions the very specifically Vajrayāna notion of the four blisses:

\[\text{ānandā ye prakathyante viramāntāḥ śarīrataḥ} \]
\[\text{te 'pi bindūdbhavāḥ sarve jyotsnā candrabhavā yathā} \]

\[\text{7.4} \]

\[\text{°} \text{viramāntāḥ} \] C; ciram antaš M2, viramāntā JK

The [four] bodily blisses whose last is [the bliss of] cessation all arise from bindu, just as moonlight arises from the moon.

Other Buddhist features of the text as found in C are deliberately omitted or altered in the later witnesses. Examples of these are listed below. This list is not exhaustive; further close reading of the text is likely to reveal more examples.

1. Chinnamastā

Manuscript C opens with a sragdharā maṅgala verse in praise of the goddess Chinnamastā:

\[\text{nābhau śubhrāravindaṃ tadupari vimalaṃ maṇḍalaṃ caṇḍaraśmeḥ} \]
\[\text{saṃsārasyaikasārā tribhuvanañjani dharmavartmodayā yā} \]
\[\text{tasmin madhye trimārgē tritatyanudharā chinnamastā praśastā} \]
\[\text{tāṃ vande jñānarūpāṃ maraṇabhayaharāṃ yoginīṃ yogamudrāṃ} \]

\[\text{7.4} \]

\[\text{a śubhrā°} \] C; candrā° M2
\[\text{● vimalaṃ} \] C; vivaraṃ M2
\[\text{c tasmin} \] C; tasyāṃ M2
\[\text{● tri°} \] M2; tre° C
\[\text{● chinnamastā praśastā} \] C; cittahasthāṃ praśastām M2
\[\text{d tāṃ vande jñānarūpāṃ} \] C; vande jñānasvarūpāṃ M2

At the navel is a white lotus. On top of that is the spotless orb of the sun. In the middle of that, at the triple pathway, is she who is the sole essence of samsara [and] the creator of the three worlds, who arises on the path of dharma, who has three bodies [and] who is lauded as Chinnamastā, “she whose head is cut.” I worship her, she who has the form of knowledge, who removes the danger of death, the yogini, the seal of yoga.

Until the 16th century, Chinnamastā is not mentioned in non-Buddhist texts (Bühnemann 2000, 37). Her Vajrayāna origins have been demonstrated by Sanderson (2009, 240–241), who notes how the epithet dharmavartmodayā, found in the Amṛtasiddhi as dharmavartmodayā, is “strictly Bud-

“One might argue that this maṅgala verse could be an addition to the text when it was redacted by a Vajrayāna tradition, but the verse is also found in the Grantha manuscript M₂ in a corrupt form. Chinnamastā’s name is given therein as Cittahasthā, but the epithets dharmavartmodayā and tritayatanudharā are preserved. The Rajasthani and Nepali manuscripts omit the verse.

2. chandoha

At Amṛtasiddhi 1.16, manuscript C uses the specifically Buddhist term chandoha:24

śāgarāḥ saritas tatra kṣetrāṇī ksetrapālakāḥ
chandohāḥ puṇyatīrthāṇi pīṭhāṇi pīṭhadevatāḥ ||1.16||

16c chandohāḥ ] em.; chandohā C, saṃbhedāḥ MJK

There are oceans, rivers, regions [and] guardians of the regions; gathering places (chandohāḥ), sacred sites, seats [of deities and] the deities of the seats

In Śaiva texts chandoha is found as saṃdohā.25 That the manuscripts other than C read saṃbhedāḥ, which makes no sense, suggests that they may derive from an archetype that had saṃdohāḥ, which subsequent copyists did not understand.

3. The four elements

Amṛtasiddhi 6.2 refers to four physical elements:

prthōvyādīṇī catvāri vidhṛtāṇi prthak prthak ||6.2||

2a catvāri ] C; tattvāni cett.

The four [elements] earth etc. are kept separate [by the breath].

In Śaiva and other Hindu traditions there are five primary physical elements. The later manuscripts therefore change catvāri, “four,” to tattvāni, “elements.”

4. kūṭāgāra

This is a common term in the Pali Canon, meaning “a building with a peaked roof or pinnacles, possibly gabled; or with an upper storey” (Rhys Davis and Stede 1921–1925, s.v. kūṭāgāra). It is also found in several Vajrayāna texts, where it refers to a “multi-storeyed palace” in the middle of a maṇḍala (Reigle 2012, 442). It is not found in Śaiva texts.

24 Sanderson 2009, 180 note 436.

and is not recognised by the later north Indian and Nepali witnesses of the Amṛtasiddhi.

7.10ab kāmarūpe vased binduḥ kūṭāgārasya koṭare |

Bindu resides at Kāmarūpa, in the hollow of the multi-storeyed palace.

5. trivajra

8.21 in C mentions the three vajras, i.e. the common Vajrayāna triad of kāya, vāk and citta. In the other witnesses trivajrāṇāṃ is found as trivar- gāṇāṃ.

Then absorption into the three vajras is sure to arise.

6. trikāya

A reference to the Buddhist notion of the triple body is expunged in the later witnesses:

Omniscience, which brings about complete understanding of the triple body, should be known by the knowledgable to be the mark of he whose mind has been mastered.

7. buddha

Verses in which C has (or its archetype is likely to have had) buddha are reworked in the later witnesses.

binduḥ sarvagato devo bindus trailokyadarpaṇah ||7.15||

26 The Mahāmudrātilaka (draft edition of Staatsbibliothek zu Berlin Preuss. Kulturbesitz Orientabteilung Hs. or. 8711, folio 17 verso) locates the bodily Kāmarūpa between the eyebrows.
Bindu is Buddha, bindu is Śiva, bindu is Viṣṇu, the lord of creatures, bindu is the omnipresent god, bindu is the mirror of the three worlds.

tāvad buddho 'py asiddho 'sau narāḥ sāṁsāriko mataḥ | 32.3ab

Even a Buddha, as long as [he remains] unperfected [by means of the practice taught in the Amṛtasiddhi], is considered a worldly man.

8. svādhiṣṭhāna yoga

In two places the Amṛtasiddhi mentions svādhiṣṭhāna yoga. This is a method of visualising oneself as a deity which is central to the teachings of a wide variety of Vajrayāna texts (e.g. Guhyasamāja 7.2, where it is called svādhidaivatayoga, and the Pañcakrama, whose third krama is called the svādhiṣṭhānakrama). In the two verses from the Amṛtasiddhi given below, the methods of svādhiṣṭhāna yoga are said to be ineffective; to achieve the goals of yoga one must use the practice taught in the Amṛtasiddhi. The later witnesses of the text do not understand the phrase svādhiṣṭhānena yogena and, presumably surmising svādhiṣṭhāna to refer to the second of the six cakras in a system taught in many hathayoga texts (but not in the Amṛtasiddhi, which makes no mention of cakras), they change yogena to mārgeṇa in an attempt to make the phrase refer to a pathway in the yogic body.

svādhiṣṭhānena yogena yasya cittaṃ prasādhyate |
śilāṃ carvati mohena tṛṣitaḥ khaṃ pibaty api ||8.9||

He who tries to master his mind by means of self-established yoga deludedly chews a rock and, thirsty, drinks the sky.

svādhiṣṭhānena yogena na kṣīyete guṇau nṛṇām |
asti mudrā viśeṇa gurumukhābhasaṃbhavā ||10.11||
The two [unwanted] guṇas [rajas and tamas] in men are not destroyed by self-established yoga. There is a mudrā especially [for that], born from the lotus-mouth of the guru.

4 Conclusion

The Amṛtasiddhi was composed in a Vajrayāna Buddhist milieu and its intended audience was other Vajrayāna Buddhists. Its teachings are subsequently found in haṭhayoga texts from a wide range of non-Buddhist traditions. This does not mean, however, that haṭhayoga itself was a product of Vajrayāna Buddhists. I have argued elsewhere (e.g. Mallinson 2015) that some haṭhayoga techniques were current among ascetics long before their codification. The Amṛtasiddhi was the first text to codify many of haṭhayoga’s distinctive principles and practices and was thus the first to assign names to them. As a result the Amaraughaprabodha, the first text to teach physical yoga methods under the name haṭha, includes among its techniques the Amṛtasiddhi’s mahāmudrā, mahābandha and mahāvedha (with slight variations in their methods). In addition to these physical techniques, the Amaraughaprabodha also adopts from the Amṛtasiddhi the more theoretical doctrine of the four avasthās or stages of yoga, showing that the Amṛtasiddhi’s influence was more than simply terminological.

Because they share traditions of 84 siddhas, several scholars have posited connections between Vajrayāna Buddhists and Nāth yogis,27 with whom the practice of haṭhayoga has long been associated. The Amṛtasiddhi’s Vajrayāna origins and its borrowings in subsequent haṭhayoga texts, some of which are products of Nāth traditions, provide the first known doctrinal basis for this connection and a stimulus for its further investigation.28

27 Although such usage is not found in pre-modern texts, to avoid confusion I use the word “Nāth” to refer to ascetics usually called yogīs or jogīs in texts and travellers’ reports and whose traditions, with some exceptions such as those which trace their lineages to Kānhapa or Kṛṣṇācārya, came, by the sixteenth century at the latest, to be grouped together in twelve panthas or lineages. On the Nāth Saṃpradāya, see Mallinson 2011.

28 The historical context of this connection is explored in Mallinson 2019, in which the Konkan site of Kadri (in present-day Mangalore) is proposed as the location of the transition from Vajrayāna Buddhism to Nāth Śaivism evinced by the Amaraughaprabodha’s reworking of the teachings of the Amṛtasiddhi.
