Expression of the two Na\textsuperscript{+}/water pore-forming claudins, claudin-2 and claudin-15, is regulated during human development. Expression of these claudins increased in celiac disease and decreased expression in graft-versus-host disease and common variable immunodeficiency, but the specific claudin affected differed between children and adults, suggesting distinct contributions to diarrheal pathophysiology.