Abstract: The nahwu study cannot be separated from an important figure named Sibawayh. He is a scholarly figure who has been consensually recognized for this superiority and scientific genius, he is recommended as a reference for other scholars, especially when it comes to discussing knowledge about Arabic grammar in accordance with the rules. Although he was a native Persian who was not very good at conversing Arabic, he was a very influential expert on Arabic grammar. His effort entitled al-Kitab is the first recorded book of Arabic grammar. He has been recognized as one of the greatest linguists of all the time especially in the filed of nahwu among linguists in the world. Sibawayh contributed his thoughts about nahwu to several types in an-nida and munada according to his version. The research method used in writing this journal is a qualitative descriptive method, the writer describes munada and its types. Keywords: BBC Online News, Puctuation, Language Error.

INTRODUCTION

The fullname of a Persian Proponent of nahwu science is Abu Bisyr ‘Amr ibn ‘Utsman ibn Qanbaral-Harits, better known as Sibawayh. He was born in the al-Bayda’ area, near the city of Siraz, where he died. His youth spent in Basrah. His initial interest was in the study of Hadith dan fiqh. Than he was interested in studying Arabic grammar.1

Sibawayh is an honorary nickname (laqab) for the great ulama ‘nahwu mazhab Basrah. The word "sibawayh" (سيبويه) comes from Persian (Iran) which consists of two words, namely : سيب which means apple and ويه which means aroma. So, Sibawayh means the aroma of apples. In addition, some argue that sibawayh comes from the word سي which means thirty, ويه and ب which means the smell of fragrance; thus it means thirty fragrant smells. This title is indeed related to the fragrance of his name as a character who managed to systematically compile nahwu's work and his work was sufficient to determine the development of nahwu in the following years.2

Sibawayh received wide attention from linguists and history of Arabic language, especially from historians of Islamic literature in general, both in the West and in the East. Broadly speaking, the attention of these experts revolves around biography, the contribution of Sibawayh's grammatical thought to Arabic grammar, the reaction of the first generation of nahwu experts to Sibawayh's thought, the position of Sibawayh's grammatical thought in the middle of the grammar school that was developing at that time, Sibawayhi's masterpiece, the al-Kitab, manuscripts and the originality of their thoughts.³

Sibawayh is considered one of the important first Arabic scholars. He is the author of the first book published in Arabic: Sibawayh’s Kitab in which he gathered the rules of Arabic in its four levels: Linguistics, Syntax, Morphology, and Phonetics. This book was soon considered the cornerstone from which all other later grammarians throughout the years based their studies on. Grammarians quoted from it, tried to explain its complex matters and extract from it syntactic rules to justify their publications.

This matter urged us to think seriously of the way other grammarians treated Sibawayh’s grammar, whether quoting or understanding, in about 80 syntactic publications starting with Al-Muktadhab by Al-Mubarid (280) and end up with Hasnia Al-Khudary Ala Shareh Ibn Akeedl (1287H). This study came to explicate all viewpoints to investigate and scrutinize what is wrongly related to sibawayh and assess them.⁴

The nahwu study cannot be separated from an important figure named Sibawayh. Although not an Arab, but from a Persian who is not very good at conversing in Arabic, this character often becomes an icon or symbol of nahwu. There has not been a book that has been properly compiled, either before or after his time, although some scholars consider his work, al Kitab, to be a compilation of "learning results" to al-Khalil ibn Ahmad, rather than an original work of creative thinking.⁵

He is a very influential expert on Arabic grammar. His work, entitled al-Kitab, is the first recorded book of Arabic grammar. He has been recognized as the greatest expert on Arabic language and is considered one of the greatest linguists of all time among the linguists of the world.⁶

His first lessons in religious knowledge were at Shiraz. He moved to Basrah when he was a teenager. In this city, he later joined various forums for experts in fiqh and hadith. He also followed diligently in the science council that was brought up by Hammad ibn Salamah ibn Dinar (d. 169 H), a famous hadith scholar at that time. It is reported that Sibawayh made several mistakes (lahn) in reciting the hadith of the Prophet, so that he was motivated to deepen the Arabic language and its grammar. He then joined the forum (halaqah) of linguists and nahwu experts, such as: 'Isa ibn' Umar ats-Tsaqafi (d. 149 H), Abu al-Khatthab al-Akhfasy (al-Akhfasy senior), Yunus ibn Habib al-Dhabbi (d. 182 H), Ab-Zaid al-Ansari, author of al-Nawâdir fi al-Lughah, Harun ibn Musa al-Nahwi (d. 170 H), expert Qira'at, and studied specifically from al-Khalil ibn Ahmad (d. 166 H or 175 H).

From this last teacher, he obtained almost all the lessons of nahwu and harf, both through his request for dictation (istimla') and through his own mutilation. With these two methods, and reinforced by the question and answer method and asking for a more detailed explanation directly from his teacher (istifsâr), Sibawayh strengthened his knowledge and understanding of Arabic linguistics and nahwu. Apart from that, he was also diligent in memorizing the arguments and proofs (martyrs) that were narrated from the Arabs through his teacher. Like the teacher, he too often conducted a "direct survey" into the interior of Baduwi on the land of the Hejaz Arabia in general and make field notes to gain knowledge of the language still original and not contaminated with errors in Arabic.

METHOD

The research method used in writing this journal is a qualitative descriptive method, namely the author describes and explains about munada and its types. In line with what is expressed by Cresswell in his book Educational Research that qualitative research is a type of research in which the researcher is very dependent on information from the object/participant on: a wide scope, general questions, data collection which mostly consists of words/texts from participants, explain and analyze words to conduct research subjectively.

RESULT AND DISCUSSION

An-Nida' According to Sibawayh's Thought

There are 2 types of Munada 'according to Sibawayh:

a) Maf'uulun Bih

Example:
- يا خالد
  - أبا أنا أنادي خالد
- يا زينب
  - أبا أنا أنادي زينب
- يا فائز
  - أبا أنا أنادي فائز

b) Mukhotob : Marfu`

Example:
- يا خالد
- يا أمير
- يا فاطمة
- يا حليمة
- يا سليما ن

Here are 8 types of an-Nida 'according to Sibawayh :

a) Must be Marfu 'and Mufrod (mandatory)
Example :
- يا خالد الطويل
- يا لطيفة النحيث

b) Representing Words of Praise and Words of Reproach
Not just racing on Kohlid and here are the words of praise. But the race against two people, Rojulu and Abdallah. Those whose harakat "د" is in the community of nashb because there is a'athof 'letter. Now "المسلمين" and "المصلحين" have a fathah society because they match the closest word, namely from the word Abdallah who has fathah society.
Example :
- يأمها الرجل وعبد الله المسلمين الصالحين

c) Issues and Traits at One Level
Example :
- يا زيد ابن عمر
- يا محمد حبيب الله

d) Isim which is repeated in the state of Idhofah. The First Word Is Just Like The Second Word
Example :
- يا تتم تم عليكم لأبلككم
(yaa Taima Taima from the lineage of `Adi you are an orphan)
- لا ينبغيكم في سوءة عمر
(Don't let Umar meet you in a bad condition).

e) Idhofah Mentioning Who Was Called for Himself
Example :
- يا قوم لا يذل عليكم
- يا باب وأحببت ، يا بارب
- يا أبا راب وعطره حرام ومليسة حرام وعذى بالحرام فإني يستجاب له10
Especially for an-Nida "ي" is omitted, because an-Nida' is often called the Arab "ي" is replaced Kasroh.

f) Two Types of Isim which are combined into One Meaning Mudhof has several more types including munada' mudhof. Namely munada in the form of a pure isim (final shohih) which is translated as ya 'mutakallim persists the letter ya'inatu word based on the original word with mengukunkan.
Example :
- بين الله
- يا ابن أخي
The "ي" is not removed. Because after "ي" there is the word "ابن" first then "أب"
g) Nida 'which is given to Munada (who is called) with the letters Idhofah in Dua Situation Istighotsah (asking for help) and Ta'ajjub (surprising).

- Istighotsah

Example:
- يَا للناس

(ask for help)

The word cannot be interpreted textually. Harakat fatihah in the letter "ل" show istighotsah. And the vowel of kasroh in the letter "س" indicates idhofah.
- Ta'ajjub

Example:
- يَا للْعَجَب

h) Isim which is preceded by a kasroh Isim which is preceded by a kasroh is an order for the person who is called.

Example:
- يا Fouqatha الأجاب

: ل people who ask to help him
: ل who need to be helped

In his treatment of definiteness (Kitabl, 219-226/187-193) 7, Sibawayh argues that a distinction of the five definite classes, i.e., proper nouns, the mudaf annexed to the definite when the speaker does not intend the meaning of tanwin, the definite article alif-lam, vague nouns and pronouns (kitab I, 219/187), is based on a kind of hierarchy of definiteness. However, words are either definite or indefinite, they cannot possibly be more or less definite. Conversely, words can be more or less identifiable and the crucial element here is the listener's ability to identify a particular referent is nakira not when it is grammatically coded as such but rather when the listener fails to recognise it as knpwn or familiar. The hierarchical order in Sibawayh relates more precisely the syntactic behaviour and degree of adjetival qualifiability of each definite class to its corresponding definite nature. Moreover, the rule of definiteness and the pragmacy principle of identifiability have a major role in determining word order in Arabic nominal sentences as well as the eligibility of nouns and verbs to occupy the initial position in nomina; sentences. 14

Thought Contribution of Nahwu Imam Sibawaih

Imam Sibawaih has the real name 'Amrun bin' Utsmān bin Qanbar Abū Bisyr. The word "Sibawaih" is a nickname that comes from Persian, the word "sib" means apple, while "waih" it means fragrant. So the word "Sībawaih" means the fragrance of apples. It is said that the fragrance of the apple emanated from his body. Imam Sībawaih was born in Persia in 148 H-180 H or in 765 AD-795 AD, to be precise in the city of Albaidha, 8 one of the cities in the Istikhar Province of the Persian state (Iran, now) near Syairaz. Sībawaih and his family moved to the city of Basra, the country of Iraq, where he grew up in a scientific environment.9 Since childhood he studied with scholars from the schools of Basra, Hijaz, Najd (Nejed), Tuhamah and other cities. And when he performed the pilgrimage, he had studied with the scholars he met in Haramain, so he was included in the knowledge of qiyās (analogies) and qirā'at.15

The Sībawaih Book provides a major scientific contribution, especially in the study of Arabic Syntax, the role of Imam Sībawaih which is widespread, giving birth to modern nahwu figures, said Syauqi Dhaf who has explained that anyone who reads this phenomenal work of Sībawaih will be more stable because this book is the mother book of nahwu and the arrangement also that the role of the teacher, namely Imam Khalīl bin Aḥmad taught Sībawaih a lot about the basics of āmil theory and its laws and it is necessary to know that the theory of āmil theory is actually from the teacher's thought.16

Some of Imam Sībawaih's contributions in the development of nahwu science, including :

1) The method of nahwu science which was initiated with patience by Imam Sībawaih as a form of contribution, made the Al-Qur'an the main reference because the language of the Al Qur'an came down with Arabic which was very fasāḥah or fuṣḥa.

2) The work of Sībawaih (Al-kitāb) has become a measure of the importance of nahwu science from the classical to the modern period.

3) Imam Sībawaih did not make ma'nawi hadith as the basis for his method of studying nahwu science because the people of 'ajam were not fluent.

4) Imam Sībawaih made Arabic poetry as one of the main references with a very strict selection.

5) Imam Sībawaih made the hadith lafẓī a language that was considered fluent in the nahwu science method because his language was not influenced or mixed by foreign languages.17

CONCLUSION

Sibawayh's thinking is very genius about everything about nahwu (grammatical grammar). He is a very influential linguist. There has not been a book that has been properly compiled, either before or after his time, although some scholars evaluated his work, the al-Kitab, more as a compilation of "learned results" of al-Khalil ibn Ahmad, rather than original works of creative thinking. I will here express his thoughts on one of his works, namely in chapter an-Nida, which includes several types:

- Must be marfu’ and mufrod (mandatory).
- Include words of praise and reproach.
- Isim and Traits at One Level.
- Isim who is repeated in Idhofah state. The first word is exactly like the second word.
- Idhofah Mentioning Who Was Called for Himself.
- Two types of isim which are combined into one meaning.
- Nida ’which is idolized to Munada (who is summoned) with the letters idhofah in two situations istighotsah (asking for help) and Ta’ajjub (surprising).
- Isim which is preceded by lam kasroh.

Suggestions for further research, the writer hopes that the research on the next of An-Nida Theory According To The Perspective Of Nahwu Sibawayh Thought can be continued into the next research considering that there are still many values contained in the next of An-Nida Theory According To The Perspective Of Nahwu Sibawayh Thought. Both in terms use of other theoretical studies, the way understanding Sibawayh in later syntatic heritage, and others.
