INTRODUCTION

A written form that pays attention to the structure of language by revealing events or realities in human life is called a literary work. In other words, literary works can be used as an intermediary medium to express human self in the social, moral, psychological, and religious fields. In addition, it becomes a media of use to introduce national culture through written language (Rondiyah et al., 2017, p.141). This provides a space or dimension that has begun to fade in society. Therefore, literary works are used as teaching materials to provide experiences about appreciation and explore creative literary works. It can directly provide students with the form of appreciation, enjoyment, experience, and appreciation through literary learning activities.

Furthermore, it can give students sensitivity to various values as a form of reflection of literary works (Abidin, 2013, p. 213). So, learning about literary works given at the tertiary in University is divided into two parts, namely old literature and new literature. Old literature that is given refers more to Malay literature in oral form in the form of old poetry and prose. Old poetry is divided into eight types, namely (1) Old Poetry; (2) Poem; (3) Poetry; (4) Gurindam; (5) Seloka; (6) Thimble; (7) Talibun, and (8) Karmina. Meanwhile, old prose is divided into ten types, namely (1) Mithe; (2) Legend; (3) Sage; (4) Fable; (5) Funny Tales; (6) Hikayat; (7) Framed Stories; (8) Tambo; (9) Epic, and (10) Solace's Story. Furthermore, new literature has undergone changes and is influenced by foreign cultures so that it is divided into five types, namely (1) Novels; (2) Biography; (3) Short Stories; (4) Drama, and (5) Sonnets.

This study focuses on learning by observing old literature student now rare interest to learn it. In addition, they have difficulty learning the language used in old literary works. In this case, learning in tertiary institutions adjusts to the right conditions and atmosphere for students to form a positive personality and increase experience (Orian & Jucan, 2013, p.576). Thus, learning emphasizes the context of the past associated with present events in order to provide value in daily life. In addition, it can present moral values to educate people to become qualified people (Janthaluck & (Laila), 2012, p.219).
In this connection, the object used in learning is folklore. Folklore can provide cultural expressions of society that are sourced from oral literature. In addition, there is the identity of a nation that develops through oral literature until it is passed down from one generation to the next (Nuari, 2018, p.17). This gave birth to a folklore from the Ngawi regency by providing dimensional reality in society by means of art and culture. This disclosure comes from the origin of the name of the area by connecting humans with the environment that cannot be separated. It is reinforced by research by (Mufida et al., 2018, p.341) that folklore originates from a certain regional description that describes the characteristics of each region.

Additionally, folklore origins of the village in Ngawi district can provide a humanism values and moral character. Teaching such as this should be given to young people especially students who can not be taken away by society. It is strengthened by the research of (Maryati et al., 2020, p.505) that folklore has a strategic element as a medium for character building for children in both families and communities. So long as literary works titled humanists give a new dimension to show the attitude that must be done by proper human beings towards each other and the surroundings.

The research that is relevant to this research is the research conducted by Wulandari (2017) entitled the “Kelayakan Aspek Materi dan Media dalam Pengembangan Bahan Ajar Sastra Lama”. This study has a similarity in the use of locally-based media folklore literature long learning in Higher Education. The difference is found in the teaching materials used, these researchers used structural analysis and meaning of the ancient texts Minangkabau.

Furthermore, the research produced by Karyadi & Khasanah (2019) entitled "Development of Early Childhood Education Teachers (Paud) Skills in Stroy Activities Using Natural Material Media Potential of Local Wisdom in Tulang Bawang District". This research has something in common, namely utilizing folklore media of local wisdom. The results of this study found renewal of teaching media using the print module for Early Childhood Education teacher with the natural potential of media-based local knowledge that can develop storytelling skills.
In addition, the research written by Cahyani & Junaidi (2019) was entitled "Andai-Andai Folklore: A Media for Internalization Character Values and Educating Children". The study, written have in common with this study, the use of local folklore text media to take the values contained therein. The differences in this study include more character values. The results of the study found that Andai-Andai folk stories contain many good values about harmonious relationships and making children better. In addition, it can provide children's media to enhance and promote character to children. Side difference value of this research object is used as the character education.

Related about this research on the use of folklore for teaching materials in universities, there are some relevant research. One study by Kusnita et al. (2016) provides the benefits of folklore for teaching materials to bring folklore to life as a form of strategy for preserving oral literature for the younger generation. However, the difference lies in the object of folklore which leads to Malay literature in West Kalimantan. Equally, in the research of Maryati et al. (2020) that folklore can provide sources, media, and learning materials for students in the context of education as character planting.

Furthermore, Kukhta et al. (2015) this study provides learning in the educational environment about the focus of creating an environment to contribute optimally by exploring the potential for creativity and a holistic and harmonious personality. The research conducted by Miller (2015) found that humanist values can provide the ability to regulate life, especially to avoid violence and oppression of the community environment.

This study attempts to analyze the humanism values contained in the folklore in Ngawi district. The collection of stories contains very strong humanists and provides a humanitarian attitude that is contained in it and can be used as old literary learning in University. Therefore, this research is entitled The Utilization of Humanism Values in Folklore in Ngawi Regency at Old Literature in University.

Data (02): Pada suatu hari, terjadilah suatu kejadian yang sangat menggemparkan yaitu masyarakat di sebelah selatan pasar itu banyak yang sakit perut atau diare. Hampir semua warga terkena penyakit itu. Akhirnya pasar disitu menjadi lumpuh, sunyi, dan sepi. Beberapa hari berselang Empu Sutopo memanggil Semburo (Claudia, 2021,p. 3).

Data Analysis (02): The quote from the story of the origin of the village of Sembung in data (02) provides a humanism value regarding nonviolence towards the problems experienced by the Talok market community. Psychologically, Empu Sutopo pays attention to his community through Empu Semburo. Empu Sutopo tried to give something to the community so that the plague he was experiencing would soon disappear. He hopes that by helping the community, the Talok market economy can recover.

Data (03): Zaman dahulu kala, ada sebuah kerajaan Mataram yang sangat besar yang dipimpin oleh beberapa Pangeran. Mereka masih dalam satu garis keturunan yang selalu hidup rukun tanpa ada perselisihan (Claudia, 2021, p.7-8).

Data Analysis (03): a quote on the origin story of Karangmondo hamlet, Rejomulyo village data (03) gives a humanism value about nonviolence focusing on social in the form of brotherhood. Even though the Mataram kingdom was led by several princes, they did not feel jealous or envious. They try to maintain the brotherhood that is still in the same lineage to always live in harmony. They try to maintain a good brotherly relationship so that there is no division because if there is the slightest gap, the invaders will easily attack perfectly.
