WTO Announces Formalized Slavery Market For Africa
At a Wharton Business School conference on business in Africa that took place on Saturday, November 11, the WTO announced the creation of a new, much-improved form of slavery for the parts of Africa that have been hardest hit by the free trade there.

Farm talks chair circulates eight texts on market access
Ambassador Crawford Falconer, chairperson of the agriculture negotiations, sent members eight new working documents on market access — on 4 January 2008, bringing the total since November to 16. After the chairperson circulated his revised “modalities” paper in July and August, the talks entered their most intensive phase so far. The working documents reflect progress made. They are designed to focus the discussions and help the chairperson prepare the next revised draft “modalities” paper. 04/01/2008

Mothers Again Urged to Eat Fish
Advisory at Odds With FDA Stance

By Sally Squires
Washington Post Staff Writer
Thursday, October 4, 2007; A01

Pregnant and breast-feeding women should eat at least 12 ounces of fish and seafood per week to ensure their babies' optimal brain development, a coalition of top scientists from private groups and federal agencies plans to declare today in a public advisory that marks a major break with current U.S. health advice.

The scientists' conclusion is at odds with the standard government advice issued in 2001 that new mothers and mothers-to-be should eat no more than 12 ounces of seafood per week because of concerns about mercury contamination.

Shifting data and advice on how women's consumption of fish and seafood affects brain development of fetuses and infants, the most vulnerable groups, have produced one of the more vexing nutritional dilemmas of recent years.

In the short term, at least, today's statement, drafted by scientists affiliated with multiple medical organizations, is likely to deepen the dilemma and Drug Administration indicated that it will study the new information but is not prepared to change the advice it reiterated in 2004.

"There is a big debate about what is safe," said Brown University professor Patricia Nolan, a former state health officer of Rhode Island and guidelines. "There are really complex questions. That is why we are doing this."
Wash. Post reported coalition's findings on seafood consumption without noting ties to industry

Summary: A Washington Post article reported on a public advisory announced by the National Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies Coalition that contradicted FDA recommendations concerning how much seafood pregnant and breast-feeding women should consume, but the article did not note that organizations affiliated with the coalition reportedly do not support the advisory, or that the coalition received financial backing from a self-described "advocacy organization for the seafood industry."

An October 4 Washington Post article reported on a public advisory announced by the National Healthy Mothers, Healthy Babies Coalition that contradicted Food and Drug Administration recommendations concerning how much seafood pregnant and breast-feeding women should consume. But staff writer Sally Squires did not note that organizations affiliated with the coalition have distanced themselves from the coalition's recommendations, or that the coalition received financial backing from the National Fisheries Institute -- a self-described "advocacy organization for the seafood industry." Further, Squires cited a February 17 article in the British journal The Lancet without noting subsequent criticism of the article.

Abstract: Study participants (women between 25 and 34 in active labor with cervixes dilated no less than 7 centimeters) were asked to use an egg as focal point for concentration during labor contractions. All subjects had planned on giving birth naturally and were trained in pattern breathing which is proven to reduce stress and pain during labor. The control

Dearest one,

My name is peter kalla, 25 years from Sierra Leone. My father and I with my younger sister escaped from our country at the heat of the civil war after the death of my mother.

Before the unfortunate death, my late father had in his personal account with a bank here the sum of $14m. As a result of the present insecurity of life, I have some challenges as it is necessary for me to know if you can assist me in the transfer of the amount.

If this is acceptable to you, send me a mail through my e-mail account so that we can discuss further on this matter.

Your's Sincerely,
peter & rose kalla

Xperts Project Highlights

IEP Online version 1.0 -

Led a User Interface team, which at its height comprised four designers, in building a system to simplify the government-mandated Individualized Education Plan (IEP) process. The IEP process is designed to provide personal attention to disabled public school students by enabling teachers to set and monitor specific developmental goals for their students. Not only was the team challenged with translating over 100 forms into an interface that was accessible to technically unsophisticated teachers, but also was charged with creating a brand that Xperts could resell to school districts around the country. After nearly a year in development, IEP Online was released to ecstatic users in Henrico County and has subsequently been installed in 6 additional school districts on the east coast. Furthermore, IEP Online currently leads the market in special education products in Virginia.
