Forgotten People: Poverty, Risk and Social Security in Indonesia
Verhandelingen van het Koninklijk Instituut voor Taal-, Land- en Volkenkunde

Edited by

Rosemarijn Hoefte (KITLV, Leiden)
Henk Schulte Nordholt (KITLV, Leiden)

Editorial Board

Michael Laffan (Princeton University)
Adrian Vickers (Sydney University)
Anna Tsing (University of California Santa Cruz)

VOLUME 296

Power and Place in Southeast Asia

Edited by

Gerry van Klinken (KITLV)
Edward Aspinall (Australian National University)

VOLUME 6

The titles published in this series are listed at brill.com/vki
Forgotten People: Poverty, Risk and Social Security in Indonesia

The Case of the Madurese

By

Gerben Nooteboom
Contents

Acknowledgements    VII
List of Maps, Tables, Figures and Illustrations    IX

1 Introduction  1

PART 1
East Java

2 A Baseline of Desire
Rural Livelihoods, Inequality and Social Mobility  45

3 Bonds of Protection; Structures of Exclusion
Social Security in East Java  92

4 Styles Matter
Coherent Diversity in Livelihood and Social Security  144

5 Risk Taking
Sex, Gambling and Power  171

PART 2
East Kalimantan

6 Badlands
Madurese Livelihoods in East Kalimantan  203

7 Experiences of Violence  233

8 Risk, Illegality and the State in Kalimantan  261

Conclusion: Forgotten people?
Poverty, Risk and Social Security in Indonesia  280

Bibliography  295
Index  312
Acknowledgements

This book is based on long periods of fieldwork in East Java and East Kalimantan and takes a broad perspective integrating theoretical issues related to peasants, inequality and individual agency. It combines the study of poverty, risk and insecurity with classic and contemporary debates in rural sociology, anthropology and development studies. I often think how fortunate I have been to study at Wageningen University in the early 1990s, to continue my PhD at Radboud University, Nijmegen during the early 2000s and to work as lecturer and researcher at the University of Amsterdam (UvA) from 2006 onwards as this has offered me networks and ideas sufficiently broad and theoretically deep and challenging to integrate and combine all these aspects.

During the fieldwork and the writing of this book, I am especially grateful to a few people who inspired me, guided me and made this study possible in one way or another. I remember Frans Hüsken, who unfortunately passed away far too early, as the person who enabled me to conduct this study in the first place. He challenged me to dive deep into historical debates on agrarian change and rural development, and stimulated me to study the lives of ‘forgotten people’ in the rural Indonesia of today. How much I would have loved to show him the final result. I would also like to thank Huub de Jonge for pointing me towards the Madurese in the first place. We both share love and respect for the Madurese in the new Indonesia. I also thank Ben White and Franz and Keebet von Benda-Beckmann, who, from a distance, have been very influential in this study, both academically and also personally. I owe thanks to Mario Rutten and John McCarthy for critically and constructively reading parts of the final manuscript and to the department of sociology and anthropology of the University of Amsterdam who enabled me to finish this book during busy teaching schedules.

I cannot possibly mention all by name. Among those I will mention are colleagues, friends and PhD fellows at the Department of Anthropology and Development studies in Nijmegen: Catrien Notermans, Edwin de Jong and Oane Visser who read and commented on earlier drafts of chapters and papers and my close colleagues at the University of Amsterdam: Laurens Bakker, Leo Douw, Tina Harris, Barak Kalir, Willem van Schendel, Roanne van Voorst and especially Rosanne Rutten who was never tired of discussing agrarian questions in Southeast Asia today.

I thank the Royal Dutch Academy of Sciences (KNAW) for sponsoring the first part of the research dealing with East Java, the University of Nijmegen for paying a large part of the costs of the second part of the fieldwork in East Kalimantan, as well as the Moving Matters (Momat) research group at the...
University of Amsterdam, the Amsterdam Institute of Social Science Research (AISSR), as well as The Netherlands Organisation for Scientific Research (NWO) and NWO-Wotro, Science for Global Development for covering some of the travel costs. In Indonesia, I want to thank the Indonesian Institute of Sciences (LIPI) for supporting the work in the field, the Population and Policy Study Centre (PSPK) and the department of Anthropology of the Gadjah Mada University, Yogyakarta for all their support and facilities, both at home and abroad and the University of Mulawarman, Samarinda.

I am grateful to the book series editors Gerry van Klinken and Ed Aspinall for reading previous versions of this book and I thank the two anonymous reviewers for their serious and helpful comments. I believe their inputs have improved the book greatly. I also thank Giles Stacey for correcting and editing this book.

A special thank you goes to my friends and colleagues in several research projects for their friendship, trust and helpful comments. Particularly, Hotze Lont, Juliette Koning, Ratna Saptari, Ruli Marianti, Pande Made Kutanegara, Pujo Semedi, Andreas Susanto, Edwin de Jong, Laurens Bakker and also many others who have become friends as much as colleagues.

Most important, I would like to thank Jolanda, my wife, and Aron, Ellis and Thimo, our children, for always being supportive and cheerful and for joining me during several long research periods in the field. Jolanda, you have sacrificed a lot and supported me doing fieldwork in a great way. As a family, our lives became shaped by and entangled with Indonesia and I believe, in the end, it has enriched us all.

In the research areas, special thanks go to Pak Eko, Bu Sumrati Eko, Mas Abdurahman and Mas Taufiq who were great assistants and who developed into clever, flexible and creative fieldworkers from whom I learnt more about fieldwork than books could ever teach. Without you, this book would not be as it is now. When we said goodbye, I felt I was leaving behind more than just friends and colleagues. I hope you will never lose your eagerness and curiosity, and continue to wonder about the world you live in. Besides them, I thank Pak Bambang Suwito and Pak Asis Efendi in East Java and Pak Haji Yusuf and Pak Holik in East Kalimantan for their hospitality, company and for facilitating me whenever needed.

Above all, I want to thank all those Madurese friends, neighbours, villagers and migrants for accepting me and my family. It was an honour and privilege to work, learn and live with you. I thank all of you who patiently explained the simplest things to me over and over again, who answered silly and sometimes sensitive questions and recalled stories, figures, events and feelings, sometimes entrusting me with experiences that were never intended to be told. It is for you, and by you, that this book is in the first place written.
List of Maps, Tables, Figures and Illustrations

Maps

1. Map of Indonesia. Research locations 3
2. Madurese speaking areas in Indonesia 30
3. Research location I: Krajan, a village in Bondowoso district, East Java 36
4. Research location II: East Kalimantan and Samarinda 40
5. Land use and brickmakers in Samarinda, East Kalimantan 221

Tables

1. Ownership of sawah and tegal per social class 76
2. Ownership and control of cattle per household 78
3. Number of months of self-sufficiency in food 81
4. Insecurities and sources of support 140
5. Value orientations and styles 160
6. Styles and orientations 161
7. Styles and social classes in Krajan 162

Figures

1. Wealth ranking and percentage of total population 66
2. Share of sawah ownership by wealth category 77

Illustrations

1. Rice harvest in Krajan 109
2. Widow with children and land 112
3. Widow without children 125
4. Brickmaking family from Bondowoso, East Java 199
5. Brickmaking family from Bangkalan, Madura 207
6. Brickmaking settlement in Balikpapan 209
7. Worker from East Java preparing clay for bricks 211
8. Carrying clay to the brick moulding place 214
|   | Description                                                                 | Page |
|---|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| 9 | Firing bricks in Samarinda Sebrang                                          | 215  |
| 10| Newly arrived migrants from Malang, East Java                                | 230  |
| 11| Refugee from West Kalimantan working in brick kiln Samarinda                 | 247  |
| 12| Madurese road worker loading gravel at brick kiln in Samarinda                | 252  |
| 13| Accommodation at one of the brick kilns of Air Hitam, Samarinda              | 255  |
| 14| Successful farmer from Malang                                               | 286  |