Global health without sexual and reproductive health and rights? Analysis of United Nations documents and country statements, 2014–2019

Lynda Gilby,1 Meri Koivusalo,1 Salla Atkins2,3

ABSTRACT

Introduction The initial International Conference on Population and Development in 1994 contains the first reference to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights (SRHR). It has been considered agreed language on SRHR in future United Nations (UN) documents. However, opposition to SRHR in global forums has increased, including in conjunction with an increase in religious, far-right populist politics. This study provides an empirical analysis of UN documents to discover whether opposition to SRHR has resulted in changes in the language on SRHR between and what these changes are.

Methods This is a qualitative policy analysis in which 14 UN resolutions, 6 outcome documents from the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW) and 522 country and group statements and 5 outcome reports from the Commission on Population and Development were collected from the organisations websites from 2014 to 2019. Framework analysis was used. The text from documents was charted and indexed and themes developed from these.

Results The results demonstrated a disappearance of the language on abortion in the CSW outcome documents from 2017 and a change in the language on comprehensive sexuality education in the CSW as well as the UN General Assembly resolutions from 2018. This change included a removal of ‘sexuality’ to an increased emphasis on the role of families. Furthermore, documents showed an inability of some states to accept any mention of sexual and reproductive health at all, expanding from the usual contestations over abortion.

Conclusion Our findings suggest that the global shift in politics and anti-SRHR actors at UN negotiations and conferences have removed previously agreed language on SRHR from future UN resolutions and outcome documents. This is a concern for the global realisation of SRHR.

INTRODUCTION

International population policies from the 1960s mainly focused on population control, where women’s reproduction was discussed in terms of population targets.1 2 These policies targeted women’s fertility, rather than individual autonomy.2 In 1984, then United States (US) President Ronald Reagan announced the first Mexico City Policy, also known as the Global Gag Rule, which stated that US federal funding was not to be used to promote abortion as a method of family planning.\textsuperscript{3,4} This contributed to women’s health activists embarking on a global advocacy movement towards more ‘women-centred population policies’, and the recognition of reproductive rights.\textsuperscript{3}

In 1994, the United Nations (UN) coordinated the first International Conference on Population and Development (ICPD) which produced the Programme of Action.\textsuperscript{5} This was adopted by 197 governments\textsuperscript{7} and formally recognised the right to sexual and reproductive health (SRH) free from coercion, discrimination and violence.\textsuperscript{8} The ICPD Programme of Action also included the formal recognition of reproductive rights, including the right to safe abortion where legal, as well as adolescents’ rights to reproductive health education.\textsuperscript{9} It provided the framework for sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights (SRHR) to be included in national health policies\textsuperscript{10} and outlined states’ obligation to provide unhindered access to SRH services.\textsuperscript{2} In 1995, the Fourth World Conference on Women in Beijing produced the Beijing Declaration Platform for Action, which reconfirmed commitments on SRHR.\textsuperscript{8}

The ICPD Programme of Action and Beijing Declaration references to SRHR are considered as ‘qualifying language’ in future UN resolutions pertaining to SRHR.\textsuperscript{2} The establishment of the UN Sustainable Development Goals (SDG’s) for the Agenda 2030 marked a development which saw the inclusion of specific targets recognising SRHR in accordance with the ICPD and Beijing Declaration Platform for Action.\textsuperscript{2,7} Despite this, many countries have been slow to recognise SRHR, with an increasing global effort by countervailing forces through lobbying and direct political interference by powerful UN members\textsuperscript{19,10} such as the previous US Trump Administration.\textsuperscript{3,11,12}

Long-standing contestations have mainly focused on access to safe abortion, comprehensive sexuality education (CSE) and modern contraceptives.\textsuperscript{10,13,14} Yet opposition to SRHR, rather than merely abortion, became more explicit with the previous US government under President Donald Trump. This was seen first in the reinstallation and expansion of the Global Gag Rule from previous Republican Administrations, which went further by preventing providers who receive any US Global Health aid from providing abortion services and also from providing any information or referrals to other providers which offer the service,\textsuperscript{3} and were part of the broader politics of silencing on SRHR by the Trump Administration. This was also seen when the Trump Administration used their position as a permanent member of the UN Security Council to threaten to veto a resolution on sexual violence in conflict if it mentioned SRH, which was then subsequently removed.\textsuperscript{15} UN negotiations and high-level meetings also continue to be subject to efforts to replace references to SRHR with conservative language which places an emphasis on traditional, heteronormative family values which exclude individual rights.\textsuperscript{2,9,11,12}

State and non-state actors, including religious and conservative non-governmental organisations (NGOs) with links to far-right politicians,\textsuperscript{16} form alliances at the UN to undermine SRHR under the guise of religion, cultural values, traditional values and national sovereignty.\textsuperscript{11} These traditional values relate to family values, which see the exercising of individual rights, particularly sexual and reproductive rights, as a threat to the family.\textsuperscript{1,2,9,11,12} The rise in right-wing political parties globally has also seen a resurgence in religious fundamentalism, where resulting alliances at the UN negotiations have been formed as part of an overall backlash on what is referred to in the literature as ‘gender ideology’,\textsuperscript{2,9,11,17} a term originally devised by the Catholic church in opposition to the recognition of SRHR in the ICPD and continues to be used by opponents of SRHR.\textsuperscript{18} Side events at the UN provide an opportunity for lobbying activities by both pro-choice and pro-life groups alike.\textsuperscript{1,5,19} Lobbying tactics of anti-choice groups have included forming NGOs and seeking UN consultative status, which provides them access to the UN Economic and Social Council and their subsidiary bodies including the Commission on the Status of Women (CSW) and the Commission on Population and Development (CPD),\textsuperscript{19} in order to influence the SRHR agenda. NGOs with consultative status at the UN have already formed coalitions to promote an anti-abortion, anti-contraception and abstinence only education agenda.\textsuperscript{10,13,19} They lobby conservative governments to appoint delegates which then seek to restrict the language on SRHR.\textsuperscript{9,16} While these lobbying activities have been documented in the literature, to our knowledge, its effect on references to SRHR in a broad range of international documents and how these may have changed over time has not been studied.

Under the political mobilising structures, cross border support between conservative anti-SRHR groups in the US and in the European Union (EU) has meant that these groups have been able to build strategies to undermine SRHR both at the regional level as well as at the UN.\textsuperscript{1,5,9,10,18} The EU and UN have been seen in Poland, Hungary, as well as by right-wing populist parties across Europe, as threatening national identity, sovereignty and family values. Right-wing politicians in Poland have taken a particularly strong stance against sex education and instead placed a focus on the role of motherhood.\textsuperscript{20} Therefore, Poland has diverged from the common EU position which is in support of SRHR.

Anti-SRHR stances at the UN are supported by a coalition which is not reduced to a US Republican Administration alone. In fact, on 22 October 2020, the previous Trump Administration presented the ‘Geneva Consensus Declaration’, an anti-abortion and pro-family document with 31 cosignatories.\textsuperscript{21} Although the opposition to SRHR has been reported in the media\textsuperscript{21,22} and in the literature\textsuperscript{1,3,7,8} to date, the effect of these efforts on SRHR language across a broad range of policy decisions, from UN resolutions and outcome documents from UN monitoring bodies for the ICPD and Beijing Declaration, has not yet been analysed. While the opposition to SRHR from a US Republican Administration is not new, this study will instead look at what the calls to replace previously agreed SRHR language are and what this has resulted in in practice on the references to SRHR in the documents. The aim of this study was therefore to determine whether the language related to SRHR changed in the UN documents between 2014 and 2019, and what those changes are. Because international guidelines on SRHR can shape policies at the national level, it is crucial to see whether the opposition efforts at the UN has influenced language on SRHR in UN documents.

METHODS

Study design

This study is a qualitative policy analysis of publicly available UN resolutions, outcome documents from the CSW, and country statements and outcome reports from the CPD between 2014 and 2019. These years were selected due to the change in influential governments which oppose SRHR during this time and the intensified efforts to roll back SRHR and look at whether this impacted the references to SRHR language in UN documents. Qualitative framework analysis was used as it is widely used in applied policy research, making it particularly suitable for assessing whether there are changes to the language on SRHR in the documents. We did not include 2020 in the analysis due to the COVID-19 pandemic which meant that a political declaration was submitted for the CSW and the CPD had no country statements to analyse. Patients or the public were not involved in the design, or conduct, or reporting, or dissemination plans of our research.

Data collection

A review of the historical and institutional setting was performed to provide the background on SRHR global policy making and to define the initial SRHR concepts in the ICPD and Beijing Declaration documents. This initial literature search demonstrated the substantial influence of the US on the international SRHR agenda setting and the attempts to expand the anti-SRHR coalition, therefore, documents were chosen from 2014 to 2019 to see how the position on SRHR changed between the Democratic Obama Administration to the Republican Trump Administration and how this shaped the debates during the negotiations.

The outcome documents were obtained from the CSW as the CSW monitors and reviews the progress of the implementation of the 1995 Beijing Declaration Platform for Action. The CPD tracks the progress of the 1994 ICPD Programme of Action, so we therefore included the yearly outcome report as well as country and group statements as these demonstrate the position of countries and groups on SRHR, what the arguments against SRHR are and to allow for a further mapping of actors. All country and group statements were included from 2015 to 2019. There were no country statements available in 2014. UN General Assembly resolutions were chosen where SRHR is typically mentioned, which includes resolutions on violence against women and girls. Resolutions from the Human Rights Council (HRC) were included to consider whether the absence of state actors which oppose SRHR may therefore not result in the same changes in the language on SRHR. The resolutions were sourced from the UN digital library at https://digitallibrary.un.org, where a full document text search on SRHR can be applied. The CSW outcome documents are available publicly online from https://www.unwomen.org/en/csw and the CPD statements between 2015 and 2018 from https://www.un.org/development/desa/population/commission/sessions/index.asp. Country and group statements that were not available in English were translated by native speakers in French, Spanish, Arabic, Russian and Chinese. Table 1 provides the list of documents which were obtained for this study. In total, 547 documents were analysed.

Analysis

Each document identified through the search was analysed using framework analysis. Each category of documentation (eg, CSW outcome documents, CPD statements, resolutions) was read and re-read to identify themes, such as CSE, abortion and access to modern contraceptives, from which the thematic framework was generated. Each document was then indexed and charted onto the relevant thematic framework, mapping the content according to emerging themes from the document category and the year in which the theme emerged, enabling a year-on-year analysis. While charting, new themes emerging in different document categories were included onto the framework of that document category. Examples of emerging themes include ‘family values’, ‘religious’ and ‘cultural context’. The results of this process form the results of this paper, showing the timing, countries and groupings making strong statements on these issues. Examples from the documents are used as quotations or boxes to exemplify content.

RESULTS

During our analysis, we found the major contested areas to be abortion, CSE and references to ‘sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights’. We describe first in table 2 how the references to CSE change and how references to abortion disappear from the CSW outcome documents. Following that, in table 3, we demonstrate how a new reference to comprehensive education, which omits ‘sexuality’ and places an emphasis on the role of families, has appeared in the CSW and General Assembly resolutions. Finally, through the CPD statements, we demonstrate the attempt to replace SRHR with family-based language, and the move from the US Trump Administration to refuse to accept any mention of SRHR.

Commission on the Status of Women

In table 2, we can see that any mention of abortion has completely dropped out of the CSW from 2017 and has not reappeared since then. This includes sovereignty clauses present in both the ICPD and Beijing Declaration that state that ‘In circumstances where abortion is not against the law, such abortion should be safe. In all cases, women should have access to quality services for the management of complications arising from abortion. Post-abortion counselling, education and family-planning services should be offered promptly, which will also help to avoid repeat abortions’. The introduction of the ‘double-parent paragraph’ in box 1, only references ‘age-appropriate comprehensive education’ and twice mentions the role of parents and legal guardians. Furthermore, ‘prevention programmes for adolescent pregnancy’ has disappeared and been replaced with education to ‘enable to protect themselves from HIV infection and other risks’. Access to ‘modern contraception’ and ‘emergency contraception’ disappeared and was replaced with ‘family planning’.

In table 3, we see that the language relating to CSE differs across the CSW, the General Assembly and the HRC, indicating that the language has not reached a consensus as it changes from year to year. This is until 2018, with the introduction of the double-parent paragraph in box 1. This is the first time in the years analysed that we observed a direct replication of anti-SRHR language, where the double parent paragraph entered both the CSW and the General Assembly. References to the role of parents entered the HRC in 2017 but the ‘double-parent paragraph’ was not included in the HRC resolutions. References to abortion remain present in the HRC resolutions but are only present in General Assembly resolutions on preventing violence against women.

Commission on Population and Development

Overall, many countries more broadly expressed their commitment to the ICPD Programme of Action, without specifically mentioning SRHR. Common themes arise from statements which do not support SRHR. These include references to ‘family values’ and ‘traditional families’, as well as calls for the respecting of national sovereignty and cultural practices. There are also countries which only referenced ‘reproductive health’ rather than SRH or SRHR. The changing support for SRHR by the US, however, is also included as this was the only country observed which showed such a dramatic regression in support for SRHR which was observed during the Trump Administration.

In 2015, the Country Statement from Nigeria only mentioned ‘maternal health’ and further indicated that ‘sexual issues’ should be given ‘less mention’. The outcome reports of the 2015 CPD highlighted that ‘the issue of sexual and reproductive health and rights was again one of the most contentious’ and can be found in box 2.

There were also countries which consistently only referred to ‘reproductive health’, which included Poland, Kenya, Pakistan, Russia, Qatar, Sudan, India, Iran, Liberia, Malaysia, Maldives, Philippines, Uganda, Kyrgyzstan and Gambia. Some countries also shied away from mentioning access to modern contraception, while others called for their use among married women only. While the EU group statement consistently highlighted their support for SRHR, including CSE, from year to year, Poland would submit a separate country statement which did not mention CSE but instead a teaching programme called ‘Education for family life’.

As well as only referring to ‘reproductive health’, Poland would also mention ‘access to methods and means of conscious procreation’. Opposition to abortion was expressed yearly by Malta, Nauru, Micronesia, the Holy See and from 2018 the USA, where calls were made for abortion not to be used as a method of family planning. In 2019, Malta specified that SRH should not include abortion, stating that they do ‘not
In 2018, the Holy See again stated that the ‘traditional family’, strengthening the institution of the ‘traditional family’, undermines individual freedom and responsibility. In 2017, The Holy See stated that ‘While responsible parenthood and sexual behavior are always moral imperatives, the coercive regulation of fertility, especially under the guise of empowerment and rights, undermines individual freedom and responsibility’. In 2018, the Holy See again stated their objection to SRHR highlighting reasons of state sovereignty ‘It is regrettable that this process was derailed because of an inordinate focus on issues related to sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights and an unwillingness to accept a reference to State sovereignty’.

References to the ‘traditional family’ was a common occurrence. In 2015, Russia refers to ‘strengthening the institution of the traditional family’, and in 2017 Belarus referred to the ‘strengthening of family values’. Belarus would also often refer to raising the ‘prestige’ of motherhood and parenthood. In 2016, Belarus stated their priority was for ‘stimulating the birth rate’ and ‘increasing the prestige of motherhood’. Azerbaijan committed to ‘Promoting family values and strengthening family institution’. In 2019, Russia stated that it ‘does not bind itself with obligations to introduce the so-called ‘comprehensive sexuality education’ for young people. Parents or guardians should carry the first priority responsibility for sex education for adolescents and young people’. Russia also explicitly rejected sexual rights saying that it is ‘With regret we note that in two of the three reports of the UN Secretary General we see the statements about the so-called ‘sexual rights’ - a concept that is not enshrined in the Cairo Agenda and does not find consensus among member countries.’

Some country and group statements called for the respect of religious and cultural context, such as Qatar and Saudi Arabia. In 2016, The African Group does not mention SRHR as an issue, and instead committed to ‘address the real needs of mothers and children, especially those unborn’. In 2017, The Holy See stated that ‘While responsible parenthood and sexual behavior are always moral imperatives, the coercive regulation of fertility, especially under the guise of empowerment and rights, undermines individual freedom and responsibility’. In 2018, The Holy See was continuously explicitly against SRHR, and instead committed to ‘family planning, information and education’. Some country and group statements called for the respect of religious and cultural context, such as Qatar and Saudi Arabia. In 2016, The African Group does not mention SRHR as an issue, and instead committed to ‘address the real needs of mothers and children, especially those unborn’. In 2017, The Holy See stated that ‘While responsible parenthood and sexual behavior are always moral imperatives, the coercive regulation of fertility, especially under the guise of empowerment and rights, undermines individual freedom and responsibility’. In 2018, The Holy See was continuously explicitly against SRHR, and instead committed to ‘family planning, information and education’. In discussing these subjects, we reaffirm the importance of taking into consideration the national, regional, historical, cultural and religious backgrounds of state.

Belarus stated their priority was for ‘stimulating the birth rate’ and ‘increasing the prestige of motherhood’. Azerbaijan committed to ‘Promoting family values and strengthening family institution’. In 2019, Russia stated that it ‘does not bind itself with obligations to introduce the so-called ‘comprehensive sexuality education’ for young people. Parents or guardians should carry the first priority responsibility for sex education for adolescents and young people’. Russia also explicitly rejected sexual rights saying that it is ‘With regret we note that in two of the three reports of the UN Secretary General we see the statements about the so-called ‘sexual rights’ - a concept that is not enshrined in the Cairo Agenda and does not find consensus among member countries.’

Some country and group statements called for the respect of religious and cultural context, such as Qatar and Saudi Arabia. In 2016, The African Group does not mention SRHR as an issue, and instead committed to ‘address the real needs of mothers and children, especially those unborn’. In 2017, The Holy See stated that ‘While responsible parenthood and sexual behavior are always moral imperatives, the coercive regulation of fertility, especially under the guise of empowerment and rights, undermines individual freedom and responsibility’. In 2018, The Holy See was continuously explicitly against SRHR, and instead committed to ‘family planning, information and education’. In discussing these subjects, we reaffirm the importance of taking into consideration the national, regional, historical, cultural and religious backgrounds of state.

Some country and group statements called for the respect of religious and cultural context, such as Qatar and Saudi Arabia. In 2016, The African Group does not mention SRHR as an issue, and instead committed to ‘address the real needs of mothers and children, especially those unborn’. In 2017, The Holy See stated that ‘While responsible parenthood and sexual behavior are always moral imperatives, the coercive regulation of fertility, especially under the guise of empowerment and rights, undermines individual freedom and responsibility’. In 2018, The Holy See was continuously explicitly against SRHR, and instead committed to ‘family planning, information and education’. In discussing these subjects, we reaffirm the importance of taking into consideration the national, regional, historical, cultural and religious backgrounds of state.
In 2015, the US country statement, under the Obama Administration, reaffirmed their support for SRHR, including the necessity of adolescent access to CSE. The 2017 country statement when discussing addressing maternal mortality and morbidity does not mention access to SRH, and only mentions ‘the

Box 1  Commission on the Status of Women 2019 ‘double-parent’ paragraph

‘Develop policies and programmes with the support, where appropriate, of international organizations, civil society and non-governmental organizations, giving priority to formal, informal and non-formal education programmes, including scientifically accurate and age-appropriate comprehensive education that is relevant to cultural contexts, that provides adolescent girls and boys and young women and men in and out of school, consistent with their evolving capacities, and with appropriate direction and guidance from parents and legal guardians’.

In 2016, still under the Obama Administration,
That year, the lack of reference to sexual and reproductive health and rights, or any other SRHR reference. The 2017 CPD outcome report highlights the contestations around SRHR stating that ‘Delegations disagreed about the meaning of these terms and whether their use required qualification’.

In 2018, there was a limited number of statements available, and the outcome report states that the commission did not reach a consensus that year for ‘reasons relating to sexual and reproductive health services’ in the ICPD Programme of Action. This proposal was supported by some delegations but unacceptable to others, and thus there was no agreement. Regarding sexuality education, the Chair’s text qualified the reference to comprehensive sexuality education by specifying that such education should be “age appropriate”. Delegations still disagreed about the use of the phrase “comprehensive education on human sexuality”. There were calls to delete the word “comprehensive” or the entire phrase. These proposals were unacceptable to some delegations, and thus there was no agreement.

Box 3 2017 CPD Report

‘Promoting sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights. Issues surrounding sexual and reproductive health and reproductive rights were again among the most contentious in discussions within the Commission. Delegations disagreed about the meaning of these terms and whether their use required qualification. For example, there was disagreement about whether these terms should be qualified by adding “in accordance with the Programme of Action of the International Conference on Population and Development and the Beijing Platform for Action”. This proposal was supported by some delegations but unacceptable to others, and thus there was no agreement. Regarding sexuality education, the Chair’s text qualified the reference to comprehensive sexuality education by specifying that such education should be “age appropriate”. Delegations still disagreed about the use of the phrase “comprehensive education on human sexuality”. There were calls to delete the word “comprehensive” or the entire phrase. These proposals were unacceptable to some delegations, and thus there was no agreement.’

DISCUSSION

Our study shows that there have been multiple changes to the language on SRHR in UN outcome documents and resolutions to focus more on families, as well as calls to reject any mention of SRHR at all. Furthermore, references to SRHR fail to reach an agreement across UN bodies.

There has been a complete removal of any mention of abortion from the CSW, and a change in CSE language which places an emphasis on the role of families and removes the word ‘sexuality’ from CSE, which is in line with the findings from the literature. However, what our study further highlights is the infiltration of the ‘double parent language’ on CSE which has moved between the CSW and the General Assembly, but not yet the HRC. This demonstrates the ability to shift anti-SRHR, family-based language across UN bodies and into other UN documents.

Abortion has been completely omitted from the CSW, as well as the qualifying language on abortion which included sovereignty clauses on safe abortion where legal, and the provision of services for dealing with unsafe abortion have also disappeared from the CSW, marking a roll back from the ICPD and Beijing Declaration commitments. Abortion has not been omitted from the General Assembly and HRC resolutions at the time of writing. The CPD country statements show a pervasive opposition to the provision of abortion services. This is despite both the ICPD and Beijing documents including sovereignty clauses that state ‘In circumstances where abortion is not against the law, such abortion should be safe’ and also reiterate that ‘In no case should abortion be promoted as a method of family planning’.

Despite the statement from the EU States supporting SRHR to include CSE at the CPD, Poland entered their own statement specifying their support for reproductive health while notably leaving out internationally agreed language on SRH. This offers support to the literature which demonstrates the opposition to SRHR from Poland and shows their divergence with the common EU position at international negotiations. Instead of access to modern contraceptives, Polish statements talk about ‘means of conscious procreation’, as well as promoting ‘education on family life’ instead of CSE.

There are consistent references to family-based language, such as ‘the importance of family values’ and ‘strengthening the family institution’. Furthermore, the CPD statements have shown that opposition had hardened from CSE and abortion to any mention of SRHR at all under the previous US Trump Administration. The language in the CPD country statements differed markedly between the Democratic Obama and the Republican Trump Administrations, and the US statements showed a substantial change on government stances on SRHR which was not evidenced in the other country/group statements. With the Mexico City Policy, SRHR has become a partisan issue where domestic politics on abortion are reflected strongly in US foreign policy.

As already shown in the threat to veto the UN Security Council resolution on sexual violence in conflict, the move to not accept any reference to SRH or SRHR will have an impact in other discussions which include SRHR, such as Universal Health Coverage. With the US being the largest donor of global health development aid, it has a substantial influence of the international SRHR agenda.\(^3\)

The removal of abortion from the CSW, the prior existence of the expanded Mexico City Policy, and the objections to SRHR in the CPD country statements demonstrate an attempt to silence any mention of abortion through foreign policy. With international guidelines on SRHR being able to form the framework of policies at the national level, the consequences of this could mean that these services could be left out of national health provisions even in countries where abortion is legal.

CONCLUSION

Our study provides empirical evidence on the disappearance of the references to abortion and a changing of the language on CSE from UN resolutions and CSW outcome documents. The inability of states to accept SRHR furthermore created a stalemate in sessions, such as the CPD, which lead to an inability to reach an agreement. Overall, opposition to SRHR has proven to be successful in removing previously agreed language on SRHR and replacing it with language which places an emphasis on the role of families. The emergence of this ‘traditional family-based language’, as seen with the ‘double-parent’ paragraph, also has the ability to be replicated across UN bodies. There is therefore a risk that this new conservative, watered down language, could become a ‘new normal’, replacing previously agreed SRHR language. There is also a risk that SRHR could be completely removed, as seen with the omission in the UN Security Council resolution, in order to pass broader commitments. Even though the new US Biden Administration has rescinded the Mexico City Policy and withdrawn the US signature from the Geneva Consensus Declaration, the coalition-building against SRHR is likely to continue as opposition to SRHR is already on the agenda of several other governments. This will continue to create challenges to defending SRHR in UN negotiations as the ability to change and remove previously agreed SRHR language and replace it with ‘family-based’ language is likely to have a substantial impact in other international, regional and national policy making forums where women’s health, gender equality, and sexual and reproductive rights are discussed. Allies must continue to monitor negotiations where discussions which include SRHR take place to ensure alliances to defend SRHR remain strong in their commitment to not allow the change or omission of SRHR from agreements. Efforts to defend SRHR must also focus on the international SRHR agenda setting and to make sure that SRHR is realised at the national levels. One of the limitations of this study is that it does not provide a more nuanced analysis of the broader political dynamics involved in the opposition to SRHR, which is beyond the scope of this study and is an area which requires further study.

Twitter Lynda Gilby @LyndaGilby1

REFERENCES

1 Eager P. Global population policy: from population control to reproductive rights. New York: Routledge, 2004.
2 Berro Pizzarossa L. Here to stay: the evolution of sexual and reproductive health and rights in international human rights law. Laws 2018;7:29.
3 Brooks N, Bendavid E, Miller G. USA aid policy and induced abortion in sub-Saharan Africa: an analysis of the Mexico City policy. Lancet Glob Health 2019;7:e1046–53.
4 Crews BB, Dusenbury L. Power and politics in international funding for reproductive health: the US global gag rule. Reprod Health Matters 2004;12:128–37.
5 Joachim JM, Setting A. The un, and NGOs gender violence and reproductive rights. Washington, D.C: Georgetown University Press, 2007.
6 Osotimehin B. Programme of action of the International Conference on population development. New York, 1999. Available: https://www.unfpa.org/sites/default/files/pub-pdf/programme_of_action_Web.pdf
7 Hadj M. Historical development of the global political agenda around sexual and reproductive health and rights: a literature review. Sex Reprod Healthc 2012;17:64–9.
8 Carroll A, Perolini AC. Human rights references to sexual and reproductive health and rights. ILGA Europe, 2007. Available: https://www.ilsa-jep.org/sites/default/files/Attachments/webversion.pdf
9 NORAD. Lobbying for faith and family: a study of religious NGOs at the United nations, 2013. Available: https://www.oursplatform.org/wp-content/uploads/lobbying-for-faith-and-family.pdf
10 Nowicka W. Sexual and reproductive rights and the human rights agenda: controversial and contested. Reprod Health Matters 2011;19:119–28.
11 Franklin S, Ginsburg F. Reproductive politics in the age of Trump and Brexit. Cultural Anthropology 2019;34:3–9.
12 Lennon KD. Sex education in America: Abstaining from sex education. Cultural Anthropology 2019;34:3–9.
13 Aliired P, David ME. Get real about sex the politics and practice of sex education. Maidenhead, Berkshire, England: McGraw-Hill Education, 2007.
14 Defago P, Angelica M, Faundes M. Conservative litigation against sexual and reproductive health policies in Argentina conservative litigation against sexual and reproductive health policies in Argentina. Reproductive Health Matters 2014;22:82–90.
15 Grager R, Lynch C. How a U.N. Bid to prevent sexual violence turned into a Spat over abortion. foreignpolicy.com, 2019. Available: https://foreignpolicy.com/2019/04/23/united-nations-bid-end-sexual-violence-rape-support-survivors-spat-trump-administration-sexual-reproductive-health-dispute-abortion-internal-state-department-cable
16 Brough M, Snip I, Provost C, et al. Interactive: Explore US Christian right ‘dark money’ spending globally. opendemocracy.net, 2020.
52 UN Women. Women’s Economic Empowerment in the Changing World of Work. 2017 Commission on the Status of Women Agreed Conclusions. New York, 2017. Available: https://www.unwomen.org/-/media/headquarters/attachments/sections/csw/61/csw-conclusions-61-web.pdf?la=en&vs=5452

53 UN Women. Challenges and opportunities in achieving gender equality and the Empowerment of rural women and girls. 2018 Commission on the status of women agreed conclusions. New York, 2018. Available: https://www.unwomen.org/-/media/headquarters/attachments/sections/csw/62/csw-conclusions-62-en.pdf?la=en&vs=4713

54 United Nations. Social protection systems, access to public services and sustainable infrastructure for gender equality and the empowerment of women and girls. agreed conclusions, 2019. Available: https://undocs.org/en/E/CN.6/2019/L.3

55 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the general assembly on 18 December 2014. 69/147. Intensification of efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls, 2015. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/RES/69/147

56 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the human rights Council on 2 July 2015. 29/14. accelerating efforts to eliminate all forms of violence against women: eliminating domestic violence, 2015. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/HRC/RES/29/14

57 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the general assembly on 17 December 2015. 70/137. rights of the child, 2016. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/RES/70/137

58 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the human rights Council on 30 June 2016 32/4. elimination of discrimination against women, 2016. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/HRC/RES/32/4

59 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the general assembly on 19 December 2016. 71/170. intensification of efforts to prevent and eliminate all forms of violence against women and girls: domestic violence, 2017. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/RES/71/170

60 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the human rights Council on 22 June 2017. 35/10. accelerating efforts to eliminate violence against women: engaging men and boys in preventing and responding to violence against all women and girls, 2017. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/HRC/RES/35/10

61 United Nations. Resolution adopted by the general assembly on 19 December 2017. 72/146. policies and programmes involving youth, 2018. Available: https://undocs.org/en/A/RES/72/146