CHAPTER 15

The Kāmasiddhistuti of King Vatsarāja

Diwakar Acharya

This essay concerns a *pūjāstuti*¹ that guides its reciter through the mental or actual worship of the goddess Nityā. The text is composed in the first person but the author does not name himself in the text. The text is named Vāmakeśvarīstuti and attributed to Mahārājādhirāja Vidyādharacakravartin Vatsarāja in the colophon of the sole palm-leaf manuscript of the text available to me. However, the last verse of the text calls it Kāmeśvarīstuti and describes it using two adjectives, kāmasiddhi and atimaṅgalakāmadhenu. It is not unnatural, I think, to name this stuti using its first adjective.²

The manuscript containing this stuti text is preserved in the National Archives, Kathmandu. It bears accession number 1–1077 and can be found microfilmed under NGMPP reel number A 39/15. The same manuscript also contains a paddhati text called Aśeṣakulavallarī that dwells on the worship of the goddess Tripurā, but this text remains incomplete as the folios following the sixteenth are absent. Our text begins on the verso of the first folio and ends in the third line of the recto of the fourth, with a colophon and a decorative symbol. The other text immediately follows in the same hand with a salutation to the goddess Tripurā. The manuscript is written in a variety of North Indian script close to Newari with frequent use of prṛṣṭhamātrā. It is possible that this manuscript was copied by an immigrant or pilgrim in Kathmandu valley. It measures 33 × 4.5 cm and has a binding hole to the left of the centre. It bears foliation in numerals in the left margin and in numbers in the right margin of verso folios. The text in the manuscript is dotted with scribal errors, but no secunda manus corrections are seen. On palaeographical grounds I place the manuscript in the late fourteenth century.

This manuscript contains 46 verses of the stuti and one more verse (numbered here as 38a) can be retrieved from a citation.³ A little less than the half of the stuti covering the first 21 verses is in Anuṣṭubh metre and the rest in

Vasantatilakā. Verses 31 and 32 form a yugalaka as the finite verb comes only in the second verse. The author plays now and again with syllabic rhyming (anuprāsa), and his language is beautiful, though sometimes elliptical.

The stuti opens with a pair of verses invoking Paramaśiva and Nityā Śakti. These verses already tell us of the poet’s understanding of the nature of Nityā and inseparability of Paramaśiva and Śakti, a point highlighted in the second half of the text, particularly verses 31–32 and 42. In verse 3 the poet states that he approaches the temple of Mrḍānī from the west gate (paścimadvāra). The next two verses invoke Gaṇeṣa and Kṣetresā. The latter, who has the form of Bhairava, can be identified as Baṭuka. Gaṇeṣa and Baṭuka together are identified as the goddess’s sons in Śākta systems and serve as her doorkeepers.

To our surprise, verse 6 invokes the Vaiṣṇava doorkeepers Śaṅkhanidhi and Padmanidhi, who bear the Vaiṣṇava emblems of the conch and lotus on their heads. Verses 7–9 invoke respectively three goddesses: Padmā, a Vaiṣṇava version of Durgā carrying a conch and discus, and Bhārati. Verses 10 and 11 invoke Manobhava, namely, the Indian love-god Kāmadeva, and describe him as the 4 This should be the intended meaning, because one is supposed to enter a temple from the western or southern gate facing east or north. Therefore, many of the early Śaiva-Śākta temples, even though they face east, have an older western or southern entry. For more discussions, see Goodall et al. 2005, 103–107 and Goodall et al. 2015, 366 (Niśvāsa, Uttarāsūtra 3:8 and annotation thereon). Another possible interpretation of paścimadvāra is “the last door to resort to.” Perhaps, the poet is punning.

5 For Gaṇeṣa and Baṭuka as the Goddess’ sons, see, e.g., Jayaratha on Tantrāloka 1.6b.

6 Śaṃkhanidhi and Padmanidhi have strong associations with the cult of Yakṣas. In the Meghadūta, Kālidāsa’s Yakṣa tells the cloud-messenger that the marks of conch (śaṃkha) and lotus (padma) are painted on the sides of the gate of his house in the city of Alakā, as he provides a number of clues for the identification of his house. In the form of emblems as well as human forms, Śaṃkhanidhi and Padmanidhi are depicted in the Ajaṇṭā caves and are associated with Yakṣa deities (cf. Bautze-Picron 2002, 225–231). Besides, the Buddhist Vasudhārā Dhāranī enjoins worship Śaṅkhanidhāna and Padmanidhāna with the goddess Vasudhārā encircled by a group of eight unspecified Yakṣinīs. Some other texts name Śaṃkhanidhi and Padmanidhi as male consorts of Vasudhārā and Vasumati, respectively. Anyway, these two are adopted by the Vaiṣṇavas as doorkeepers or attendants of Viṣṇu along with the other pairs of Jaya and Vijaya, Caṇḍa and Pracaṇḍa, Nanda and Sunanda. They also feature in some comparatively late Tantric texts of other traditions, particularly those from the south. They are listed also among the twelve Vaiṣṇava nidhis found in some Puranic and Vaiṣṇava texts. Professor Dominic Goodall kindly informs me (personal communication of November 20, 2019) that what is now called the Kailāsanātha temple in Kancheepuram seems to have Śaṅkhanidhi and Padmanidhi framing the doorway. According to him, that temple now has an eastern entrance to the enclosure, but there is an older western entry, now blocked up.

For an example of images of Śaṃkhanidhi and Padmanidhi from Anurādhapur, Sri Lanka, see Paranavitana 1955.
beloved husband of Rati and Prīti. Here we are told that the love-god forms the circular base of the Śrīcakra, the maṇḍala of the goddess Nityā Sundarī.
With these verses the text enters the process of installation of various deities in the Śrīcakra. It does not specify where these deities are installed, but from the order of verses we know that we are starting from the periphery and moving towards the centre. Verses 12–14 respectively praise eight siddhis, beginning with Aṇimā (in personified forms), eight mother-goddesses, and the deities of ten gestures of the goddess. Verses 15 and 16 venerate sixteen goddesses of attraction (ākarṣaṇa) and eight powers of the bodiless love-god (anaṅgaśakti), respectively, all in personified forms. We know from the Vāmakeśvaratantra and other Triṣūlā texts that these are installed on the petals of the sixteen- and eight-petalled lotuses. The next four verses, 17–20, respectively praise the set of fourteen goddesses/powers (śaktis) headed by Sarvasaṃkṣobhaṇī, ten Kula

7 For Rati and Prīti as Kāmadeva’s wives, see, e.g. Brahmāṇḍa Purāṇa III.44.33. A Śuṅga period teracotta plaque of Kāmadeva with Rati and Prīti is also preserved in the Mathura Museum (accession no. 34–2552).
8 It is possible that these three sets of deities are installed on the three lines forming the outermost retinue of the rectangular boundary. The Vāmakeśvaratantra, also known as Nityā-śodaśikārnava, enjoins installing the eight mother-goddesses as well as the eight siddhis in the four directions and four sub-directions, and does not instruct one to worship the goddesses of the gestures. Bhāskarārāya (p. 99), however, mentions that according to other system the outermost boundary is made of three lines and these three sets of god-deresses are installed there. According to its commentators, the Vāmakeśvaratantra teaches that one should build the boundary with only two lines. Although the Vāmakeśvaratantra does not assign a place for the gestures (mudrā) in the maṇḍala, it does describe them and asks the worshipper to use them during the worship. As found in the third chapter of the Vāmakeśvaratantra, these ten gestures are trikhaṇḍā, ksbhīni, vidrāviṇī, ākarṣini, āvesakarī, unnādini, mahāṅkuṣā, khecarī, bija, and yoni.

As listed in many texts, including the Niśvāsaguhya (7.204–205), the eight siddhis are animā, laghīma, mahīma, iśīva, vaśīva, prāpti, prākāmya, and yatrakāmavasyātā. The Vāmakeśvaratantra (1.153–155) makes them ten by adding two more, bhukti and icchā, and prescribes worshipping them in ten directions. According to the latter (1.156–157), the eight mother-goddesses are Brahmāṇī, Māheśī, Kaumārī, Vaiṣṇavī, Vārāhī, Indrāṇī, Cāmuṇḍā, and Mahālakṣmī.
9 These are not individually named in this text, but, as listed in the Vāmakeśvaratantra, the first set is made of Kāmākārṣini, Budhākārṣini, Ahaṅkārākārṣini, Šabdākārṣini, Sparśā-karṣini, Rūpākārṣini, Rasākārṣini, Gandhākārṣini, Cittākārṣini, Dhairyākārṣini, Smṛtyākarṣini, Nāmakārṣini, Bijākārṣini, Ātmākārṣini, Amṛtākārṣini, and Śarīrākārṣini (cf. 1.158– 161), and the second set is made of Anaṅgakusumā, Anaṅgakamahāla, Anaṅgamadanā, Madanāturā, Anaṅgarekhā, Anaṅgavegini, Anaṅgāṅkuṣā, and Anaṅgamālinī (cf. 1.163– 164).
10 We know only the name of this text from the rest of the Vāmakeśvaratantra (1.165–168). They are: Sarvavidrāviṇī, Sarvākārṣini, Sarvāhādini, Sarvasaṃmohini, Sarvastambhani, Sarvajambhani, Sarvatovaśini, Sarvarājani, Sarvongoddesses (kuleśvarī) headed by Sarvasiddhipradā,\textsuperscript{11} ten goddesses headed by Sarvajñā,\textsuperscript{12} and eight goddesses of speech, headed by Vaṣinī.\textsuperscript{13} They are stationed in the four consecutive retinues of fourteen, ten, another ten, and eight triangles. All deities in a group (see verses 12–20) are visualised in the same way; for example, all mother-goddesses (mātṛ) have the same appearance.\textsuperscript{14} Verse 21 invokes and asks the deities of four weapons of the goddess for their permission. It is known from other sources that they are placed around the central triangle (cf., e.g., Vāmakeśvaratantra 1.179–180). The next three verses, 22–24, praise Kāmeśvarī, Vajreśvarī, and Bhagamālinī, and urge them to fulfill the reciter’s desires. Unlike previous ones, these verses also name the three corners of the central triangle as the homes of these goddesses. Verse 25 is in praise of Nityā Sundarī, the goddess in the centre. From here onward, until the second to last verse (45), the poet praises Nityā in various ways. He first invokes the goddess as Nityā (verse 25) and later as Śrīsundarī (verse 30), and describes her as “the felicitous banner of the Love-god.” Verses 25–28 describe the beauty of the goddess, and verses 29–45, with the exception of verse 33 (which describes the Śrīcakra made of 43 triangles as her abode), exalt her in various ways, identifying her as the ultimate reality of the external as well as internal worlds. She is described as the primordial light (ādyamahas) and paramārthavidyā, which can be interpreted as the highest mantra, the mantra leading to the highest, or the ultimate gnosis. The last verse is a fine eulogy of the stuti itself, describing its reward and thus encouraging people to recite it.

It has been already pointed out by Sanderson and also Golovkova that the mature cult of Tripurasundarī developed against the backdrop of the nityā cult, evidence for which is available in the Nityākaulatantra and the Siddhakhaṇḍa of the Manthānabhairavatantra. In those texts Tripurasundarī is accompa-

\textsuperscript{11} Again, the list can be completed with the help of the Vāmakeśvaratantra, but these goddesses are here simply called śaktis. The other nine following Sarvasiddhipradā are: Sarvasampatpradā, Sarvapiyamārī, Sarvamāṅgalakāriṇī, Sarvakāmapradā, Sarvaduḥkha-vimocini, Sarvamṛtyupraśamani, Sarvavighaninivāriṇi, Sarvāṅgasundarī, and Sarvasau-bhāgyadāyini (cf. 1.169–171).

\textsuperscript{12} Sarvajñā is followed by Sarvasakti, Sarvasvāryapradāyini, Sarvajñānāmya, Sarvavādhi-vināśini, Sarvāṅgaśravasvarupā, Sarvāṅgāparā, Sarvandamayi, Sarvāṅgāśvarūpiṇi, and Sarvaspitaphalapradā (cf. Vāmakeśvaratantra 1.173–175).

\textsuperscript{13} The names of these eight can be retrieved from the mantroddhāra section of the Vāmakeśvaratantra (cf. 1.77–80). They are Vaṣinī, Kāmeśvarī, Modini, Vimalā, Aruṇā, Jayini, Sarvēśvarī, and Kaulini.

\textsuperscript{14} Neither the Vāmakeśvaratantra nor any of the paddhatis of that tradition give visualisations of these deities.
nied by a retinue of eleven and nine nityās, respectively, and worshipped with Kāmadeva. Our text identifies Kāmadeva as the husband of Rati and Pṛīti, places him on the base of the Śrīcakra (cf. verses 10–11), and installs Nityā Sundarī at the altar of worship in the centre of the maṇḍala without a consort, independent and supreme. However, in verses 31–32 she is described as devamahīṣī, although it is said that their body is one and undifferentiated. In verse 2 the poet names the goddess Nityā and invokes her as the Śakti of Paramaśiva possessing all powers and carrying out the five tasks (pañcakṛtya) for him. In verse 34 the poet invokes her as Maheśvari but states that some royal people in this world call her Lakṣmī and Parā Prakṛti. In verse 40 she is described as Atibhavā, highlighting her transcendent nature, and in verse 42 she is invoked again as Gaurī. It is thus clear that the poet of our text is a Śaiva devotee of goddess Nityā. It is important to note that in the system known to our poet there is only one Nityā, simply called Sundarī, and that the Śrīcakra is also already known. Our poet appears unaware of the sixteen nityās, who are worshipped in the tradition of the Vāmakeśvaratantra. It thus appears that the tradition this stuti text represents is different from both the cult of nityās and that of Tripurā.

The inclusion of Śaṅkhanidhi and Padmanidhi (verse 6), Padmā (verse 7), and the Vaiṣṇava Durgā (verse 8) suggests that the goddess Nityā is somehow linked to the Vaiṣṇava tradition as well. In fact, in verse 34 the poet mentions that some people call her Lakṣmī and Parā Prakṛti, but we are not aware of survival of any Vaiṣṇava paddhati of Nityā.

Now I come to the issue of the poet’s identity. The fact that he is a king and was perhaps somewhat distressed at the time of composition of the stuti can be known from the text itself (cf. verse 40). Furthermore, in the colophon the text is attributed to Mahārājādhirāja Vidyādharacakravarti Vatsarāja. Apparently, the first epithet is royal—he is the king of great kings—while the second is mantric: he is sovereign among the vidyādharas, who are supposed to possess esoteric mantric knowledge and due to this have supernatural powers. Vatsarāja is his personal name. The most famous Vatsarāja, the mythical king of Ujjayinī, does not fit the context. Another is King Vatsarāja of the Gurjara-Pratihāra dynasty (c. 775–805 CE), the father of Mahārājādhirāja Nāgabhaṭa II (805–833 CE). Vatsarāja is always called paramamāheśvara, but in the Pratāpagaḍh Stone Inscription of Mahendrapāla II (dated Year 1003 = 946 CE), 15 cf. Sanderson 2009, 47–49; Golovkova 2012, 816–817.

16 It is interesting to note that a fifteenth-century inscription from Vijayanagara remembers a king called Vatsarāja blessed by Tripurāmbā. As Sinopoli (2010, 22) cites, “As Vani blesses king Bhoka, Tripuramba king Vatsaraja, and Kali king Vikramarka, so does Pampa now bless Devaraya’ (trans. Rajasekhar 1992: 27)."
Nāgabhaṭa II is called \textit{paramabhagavatībhakta}.\footnote{cf. Sircar 1983, 251.} It may be a coincidence, but the latter's mother is named Sundari. In any case, this Vatsarāja could be our poet.\footnote{There is another poet of the same name who flourished in the second half of the twelfth and the first quarter of the thirteenth century CE (cf. Dalal 1918, vi–vii), but he is a minister, not a king. He served the Kālañjara King Paramardideva and wrote some dramatic pieces. Six of such pieces have been published in one volume under the title \textit{Rūpakāṣṭakam} (see Dalal 1918). He does not mention Nityā, Sundari, or Tripurasundari in his dramas.} Our text represents an archaic tradition that does not even know the name Tripurasundari, and thus this date in the early-ninth century CE fits it well.

I resort to Śaṅkhanidhi and Padmanidhi, who who sit upon a conch and lotus [respectively] as their seats. They are patient, bear the gestures of generosity and protection in their hands, and bring about everyone's dreams.

22 pāramaśvarya° is equally possible.
23 Finding the manuscript reading pāṇipādan tu nanditam problematic, I have conjectured pāṇipadmaṃ tu maṇḍitam.
24 This description reveals that Kṣetreśa has the form of Bhairava. I assume that he is Baṭuka-bhairava on the basis of his Bhairava-like appearance and companionship with Gaṇeśa.
I honour Padmā, [beautiful and tender like] a lotus plant. Her eyes are lotus-like and she dwells in a bed of lotuses. Her four arms look splendid with two lotuses [in two hands] and the gestures of grace and safety [in two others].

May the virgin goddess Durgā annihilate my hardships (durgāṇi), I pray. Her hands are marked by the conch and discus. She has curly locks and rides [a lion,] the king of wild animals.

May goddess Bhāratī shine upon me, I pray. She carries a rosary and a book in her hands, she has the stainless complexion of the full moon, and she embodies the entirety of knowledge.
I venerate the beloved husband of Rati, the beautiful Mind-born [God Kāmadeva]. He carries a bow and arrows of flowers and his complexion resembles the petals of Dhak. [Again,] I approach the beloved husband of Pṛiti, bent round (veṣṭitam) like the full moon,26 [serving as] the base for the ring of goddesses, in order to draw the Śrīcakra for the sake of prosperity.

I venerate those fourteen goddesses, with Sarvasaṃkṣobhaṇā at the fore, to whom [all] fourteen worlds bow. They carry a bow and arrows made of sugarcane.

śubhā varābhayabhṛto vande viśvakuleśvarīḥ sarvasiddhipradādyāś tā bahirdaśakadevatāḥ

I venerate all [ten] Kuleśvarīs, starting with Sarvasaṃkṣobhaṇā, the goddesses of the external ring of ten. They are auspicious and display the gestures of boon-giving and safety.
I resort to Sarvajñā and other goddesses situated in the internal ring of ten. They carry a rosary and a book [in their hands], and their appearance is charming like camphor.

I worship those eight goddesses of speech, Vaśinī and others, whose complexion is red. They carry in their four lovely hands a bow, arrows, a book, and a rosary.

May the four deities of the weapons [of the Goddess]—the arrows and others—red in complexion, displaying the gestures of generosity and protection, marked on the head by their own respective weapon-forms, grant me permission [for worship of the Goddess].

May the goddess Kāmeśvarī, who dwells at the front angle [of the central triangle], give me all objects of my desire. She is three-eyed, her eyes are beautiful and her limbs are ruddy. She has the crescent moon on her crest.
She looks beautiful with her four hands marked with a snare together with a goad, a plate with the nectar of immortality, the gesture of boon-giving, and the gesture of safety.

May the goddess Vajrēśvarī give me all objects of my desire. She is known to have her abode at the right corner [of the central triangle]. She is resplendent like a thunderbolt, beautiful like fresh coral, and has a bow, arrows, a snare, a hook, a shield, and a mātulaṅga fruit attached to her six arms.

May the three-eyed goddess Bhagamālinī give the glory of good fortune. She possesses abundant miraculous power and is as lovely as the moon. She is stationed in the left corner [of the central triangle] and holds in the row of her arms a snare, a goad, a sugarcane, ropes, a book, and a sword.

I uninterruptedly bow to Nityā who has a form worthy of worship. She has ascended the shining throne made of the sun, moon, and fire. She holds... in her hands a hook, a snare, arrows, and a bow, and carries the crescent moon on her crest. She is pure and clean, and her eyes, adorned with the tips of the locks of hair, are very beautiful.

I seek refuge with the glorious goddess Sundari, the benefactress of prosperity, the secret heart, whose heart is soaked with compassion. She is blazing with an utmost tenacity steeped in joy, and consequently beaming with plenteous light that shimmers spontaneously.

ādhārāvāriruhasatkaśilvāsasautmye
sauṣumṇavartmani sudhāṃsurasān śravantim |
O goddess, I praise you with mind and speech. Your greatness is primordial. Your limbs are slightly ruddy like the morning sun, and you have made the triple world happy. You are the bride of the god [i.e., Śiva], and possess a body inseparable [from his]. You bestow worldly enjoyment and also liberation from [the world]. You are the stream [of consciousness or immortality] (dhārā), O ruler of worlds. Dwelling originally in the abode of Śiva, you multiply yourself sixfold and prepare the path of existence where you nurture wonderful and manifold creation with your own six forms. You shed moonlight on the path of Suṣumṇā that is charming due to the beautiful appearance of the six lotuses serving as [your] bases.

O goddess, though you are one and simple, you are [also] nine, you are ten, you are again ten, and again you are fourteen. Thus you, the benefactor of poets, dwell in the sea of Śaktis marked with forty-three triangles.

27 These two verses depict the goddess as the stream of consciousness or immortality in the human body, known widely as Kuṇḍalinī, originating from the brahmarandhra, the abode of Śiva, flowing through various channels and reaching to the six bases. It is in this light that these verses should be read.

28 I have conjectured api in place of asi to provide a concessive tone. Perhaps this is not even necessary. In any case, on her own the goddess is singular and unembellished, but the poet appears to imply that all goddesses in different retinues of the Śrīcakra are her projections.

29 The central triangle and the immediately following retinue of eight triangles are obviously counted together as nine.
O Mother! Great Goddess! Supreme Goddess! People proclaim you Lakṣmi, Parā Prakṛti, who has chowries as lovely distinctive marks and who bears a sole [royal] parasol covering the entire world. They proclaim you as the conferer of fame, the primordial power, and the supervisor of both higher and lower realms.

You are the goddess of prosperity, and prosperities depend on you. You are the goddess of speech, and authority and words depend on you. You are the goddess of wisdom, and wise ideas depend on you. You are the foremost fortress, and towns depend on you. You are the primordial power, and yours are all the properties of power. What is the use of any further explanation: this entire world is nothing but you.
Sages address you as the destroyer of darkness, the bestower of delight, yielding the immortal nectar to all those who remember you. They address you as the ever-risen one with no possibility of rising and setting, as the underlying digit of the moon\(^{31}\) never suspected to have a stain.

O Goddess! With your energy the sun burns, the moon expands the immortal essence with his beams, and here in our body the vital functions glimmer under the control of the vital air. For, without you none can function at all.

\begin{verse}

\end{verse}

\textit{poet is telling us about two different identifications: Nityā as Lakṣmī, the consort of Viṣṇu, and Nityā as Parā Praṅṭī Vāsudeva, the supreme cause of both sentient and insentient beings.}

\(^{31}\) The underlying digit of the moon (\textit{antaścari śaśikalā}) in all likelihood is the sixteen innermost digit beyond the waning and waxing process.

\(^{32}\) The late Pundit Vraja Vallabha Dwivedi (1985, 45) presents this verse in his preface (originally written in 1968) to the \textit{Nityāśodāśikārṇava} as cited in the \textit{Aruṇāmodīni} commentary of the \textit{Saundaryalaharī} and attributed to the \textit{Kāmasiddhistotra} of Vatsarāja (cf. Śastri 1957, 221), and suggests that it should be located in the Nepalese palm-leaf manuscript of the text (the same manuscript I am editing now). However, in 1983 in the \textit{Luptāga-masamgraha}, a collection of citations from lost Āgamic texts he prepared, he writes that the verse is not found in the palm-leaf manuscript and so must come from a different text (cf. Dwivedi 1983, 25). I think Dwivedi arrived at this conclusion without reading the implied name of the \textit{stuti}. The author of the \textit{Aruṇāmodīni} writes that it is a verse from the \textit{Kāmasiddhistotra} of Vatsarāja, and the same name is alluded to in the last verse of our text. I conclude that the verse therefore belongs to this text even though it is not found in the palm-leaf manuscript. I assume that it was dropped in the process of transmission. It is thus just possible that there are still a few more verses missing from the latter part of the \textit{stuti}.
The fourteen worlds, all gods headed by Mahendra, the three embodiments [of the ultimate reality], and also the groups of sages headed by Vasiṣṭha, come into existence or cease to exist, O goddess, by the opening and closing of your eyes, because you embody all.

The Vedas, independent scholars of different capabilities, the Tantras, the collection of mantras with celebrated powers, and thoughts and feelings concerning syntax and grammar (vibhaktivisaya) and poetic compositions, all these, O mother, evolve to excellence from a millionth part of you.

Any person who is hanging on to the ultimate [reality of yours] (paramapravilambitātmā) and wishes to perceive and measure your proportions (vibhūni)\(^{34}\) with his [limited] mind, that man of perception (pramāyāḥ puruṣaḥ) smarter [than everyone] in this world evidently touches the shadow of his own head in a series of his own footsteps.\(^{35}\)

abhyaṛcyā devi bhavatīṃ vibhavāmi bhūmīṃ
āmnāyadarśitapathena yathā-katāṅcit |

33 Our poet is using the root \(spṛś\) as if it belongs to the fourth class. We cannot emend it to \(samsprśati\), because that would be unmetrical.
34 The word vibhu is treated here clearly as a noun.
35 This reminds me of a verse attributed to the now lost Trikahṛdaya and cited by Kṣemarāja in his commentaries (e.g., Śivasūtravimarśinī, p. 9): svapadā svāśiraschāyāṃ yadval langhitum ̄ihaṭe | pāḍoddeṣe śiro na syāt tatheyam bailāvī kālā ||.
O goddess! Having worshipped you I somehow manage to govern [my] land following the path dictated by the scriptures. [But] who among the people on the path of winning the love of the young lady called Atibhavā—the one who has transcended the world—is not disrespected by those people who are engaged in gossip?

O goddess! You enter the heart of a man whose mind is composed. Sweet ballads of your renown, O Gaurī, the vidyādharas sing in the groves of Haricandana trees that emit the sweet fragrance of liquor on the banks of the heavenly river.

O goddess, those great people who are honoured with your greatness achieve Śivahood as they attain perfection. They are the people who have attained perfection following the regimen prescribed in the [system of] Siddhānta for the purpose of supernatural powers as well the ultimate goal [of liberation]. O moon-faced [goddess, they] bear [the characteristics of Śiva]: the third-eye on the forehead, the moon on the head, and the ornaments of serpents.
O mother! Even the kings of gods bow to the feet of those men who have acquired a drop of the grace of seeing you. Kings of all the rich lands extending to the four oceans [bow to them] all the more, illuminating their footrests with the studded jewels of their elevated crowns.

Mindful men call you Kledanī, Kulakuṇḍalinī, Kā, Nityā, Niti, Nau,36 Nāvikā, Vidyā, Saṃvid, Viśvamayī, Umā, Kāmeśvari,37 and Kamalā.

The original reading of the manuscript gaurīti is unmetrical. The scribe has corrected it to gaur iti which is just possible, but I conjecture naur iti because of the following word nāviketi. Thus, also, the syllabic rhyme of the line is restored.

Thus, there are three deities in this tradition who can be called by this name: the chief goddess Nityā, one of the goddesses in the central triangle, and one of the goddesses of speech in the retinue of eight triangles.
I uninterruptedly remember [you], the Vidyā leading to the ultimate well-being, embodiment of bliss, the cause of the extension of all prosperities. [You are] the primordial one, the insurpassable Kalā. You are Bālā, the beloved of Kulanātha (namely, Śiva). [Your] glory is incomparable, and you are filled with many felicities.

One who recites this eulogy of Kāmeśvari called Kāmasiddhi, which serves as a very auspicious wish-fulfilling cow, placing trust [in her], is specially chosen (vivṛta) by [the goddesses of] Beauty, Prosperity, Eloquence, and Treasury of Qualities. So, what would he do with any [other] lovers?
