Introduction
In the early 1940s, prior to Malaysia's independence, men are more significant in leading a rally and establishment in all sectors. Although women were not directly involved, their dedication and enthusiasm did not disappoint, and their involvement are seen as successful in areas previously dominated by men and their services have always been appreciated (Manderson, 1981). However, the nature and behavior of the policy were developed by both groups and also showed improvement in various areas. Women's participation in politics is a landmark in the development of a country and their role is an important step in all areas such as economy, social, politics, education, etc. The women's movement in a political party is considered as the organization capability of completing and empowering a party.

According to the National Women's Policy (DWN) 2012, of the Women's Action Plan, depending on the political sector, one of them is legislative and administrative in order to determine the full involvement of women in national politics (National Women Policy, 2012). The Women's Action Plan also indicated that the government should determine women's support at the legislative and executive levels in Parliament, the state legislature, local government and other bodies. Women's participation and involvement in politics is seen as a positive approach to empower women as well as increasing their numbers at the bottom of the decision-making process. In addition, women's roles are expanding and embracing diverse areas, and women are perceived as more competitive, empowered and able to flourish (Yusoff & Aziz, 2012).

This study focused on Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS in political participation in Ipoh, Perak. Their involvement in the political party was due to their interest in politics. The political participation scenario for Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS in Ipoh, Perak makes it clear that although there are differences in the goals and policies of the struggle between the two sides, the struggle to strengthen the credibility of women is manifest in a similar way. The purpose of this study is to address the lack of women's participation in decision-making in the political structure, particularly between Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS in Ipoh, Perak. The movement of women's participation in political activities and daily life forces these groups to communicate more effectively, while being able to make decisions and be more responsible as leaders and followers in party. The main objective of this study is to analyze the factors influencing political participation and behavior between Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS and to examine the level of participation between Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS in politics.

Based on the conceptual framework of political participation and gender perspectives, this study draws on theory of model party identification approaches to examine the structures that influence the political behavior of a political party (Ball, Hussein, Loh & Wong, 1993). Manderson (1981) has published various studies on women's political participation in politics in the book entitled "Women, Politics and Change: The UMNO Women's Movement of Malaysia from 1945 to 1975". Her research focuses on the change and development of post-independence women's influence and activities, the role of women and the party's governing body, which has been the backbone of women's political activities. In addition, Manas (2008) also addressed the subject of women in politics through "What Islam says about politics". The study about women's rights and boundaries in politics and also explained prominent Muslim political figures. While Kausar (2006) in her study "Women in Politics: The Peninsular Malaysia Case" also discussed the history of political party formation and women's involvement in all political parties in peninsular Malaysia. There is also an article on "Malaysian Politics in Malaysia: an UMNO and PAS Study" by Funston (1980).

Political Participation

Activities of political activities can be divided into direct or indirect participation. The definitions of politics through political involvement are voting, holding election campaigns, attending and attending political talks and so on. According to Sukarno (2012), political participation is an essential underpinning the democratic system of a country, then those who engage in politics are those who know about what is best for themselves and their country. This is because, every decision made and implemented by the government are affecting and relating to citizen so that they have the right to know and care for the country's political development.
Bisala (2002) defined as the level of women's political participation and equality of participation freedom enjoyed by women in the shaping and sharing of power and the value that society places on the role of women. In this study, participation refers to the involvement of citizens in the political parties, which include various activities such as voting, campaigning during the election, participation in community activities, contacting elected representatives about the problem and so on, either directly or indirectly. The concept of political participation leads to the question of rights, opportunities for the participation of minorities, especially women in the political process. In addition, political participation also allows the people to express their interest by voting in the democracy system. The approach of the party identification model by Rush (1993) constitute the core of this study is based on an attitude of loyalty to a political party that is an individual's obedience and loyalty to a political party for a long time.

Methodology
150 respondents among Wanita UMNO and Muslimat PAS from Ipoh, Perak who held positions in the party and those who get involved in politics actively were selected to be the research participants. This study has collected quantitative research methods through the distribution of questionnaires and qualitative research methods by in-depth interview results. Interview method was utilized in order to support quantitative research findings. In order to test the reliability and validity of the questionnaire items, a pilot study was conducted. The pilot study is a survey conducted before the actual study done (Piaw, 2008). The data collected from the pilot study then were analyzed through Cronbach's alpha based on all components available in the questionnaire.
