МИФ О КАДМЕ КАК ДОКАЗАТЕЛЬСТВО ДРЕВНЕГО ПРОИСХОЖДЕНИЯ
СЛАВЯНСКОЙ ЦИВИЛИЗАЦИИ

Аннотация. В данной статье на основе аналитико-синтетического и сравнительного ме-tодов анализируется древний миф о Кадме, герое кавказских колхов, который во II тыс. dо н.э. основал города и распространил грамотность среди народов Балканского полуострова. Основная цель статьи – доказать что миф о Кадме подтверждает древнее происхождение славянской цивилизации и возводит его к временам Всемирного потопа (VI тыс. dо н.э.). В результате сравнительного анализа античных мифов и археологических артефактов, относящихся к мифу о Кадме, автор приходит к выводу что деятельность Кадма как законодателя, мореплавателя, металлурга, философа и героя, который побеждал и приручал диких животных а также его жены Гармонии, языческой богине гармонии и изящных искусств, метафорически отражают основы славянской цивилизации:
общественное устройство, социальные институты, грамотность, законодательство, фило-софию, металлургию, мореплавание, мифологию и искусство.

Ключевые слова: Кадм, Гармония, античная мифология, сербы, триболы, славяне, илlished cities and spread literacy among the people of the Balkan Peninsula. Basic objective of the author of this paper is to prove that the myth of Cadmus proves ancient origin of Slavic civilization following the Great Flood which occurred in the 6th millennium BC. The conclusion of the comparative analysis of antique myths and archaeological artefacts related to the myth of Cadmus is that the actions and roles of Cadmus as a legislator, navigator, metallurgist, philosopher and hero who killed and tamed wild animals and his wife Harmonia as a pagan goddess of harmony and fine arts are metaphors for the first elements of Slavic civilization such as social communities, social institutions, literacy, legislation, philosophy, metallurgy, navigation, mythology and fine arts.

Keywords: Cadmus, Harmonia, antique mythology, Serbs, Triballs, Slavs, Illyrians, Slavic civilization, legislation, imperial power, heroism, ascetism, literacy.

The analysis of an ancient myth of Cadmus who in the 2nd millennium BC arrived from Caucasian Colchis to the Balkan Peninsula and established legislation, built cities and spread literacy among local Slavic people explains a claim of Constantinopolitan historian Laonicus Chalcocondyles that «he knows with certainty that Serbs Triballs are oldest people in the world»¹ along with the fact that antique amphorae, vases and tablets with inscriptions «Heracles the Slav»² and «Serbs Heracleides»³ regarding Cadmus’ mythic counterpart Heracles were found in the sea and seacoast in the south of the Balkan and Apennine peninsulas. The analysis of the myth of Cadmus also explains the claims from medieval Russian Laurentius script and various world historians regarding the relation between Illyrian Slavs (modern Russians) who lived in the settlements of metallurgists and traders in Ladoga and Novgorod⁴ with Illyrian Slavs (modern Serbs) who lived in the Balkan Peninsula⁵ because the myth of Cadmus explains a historical link of Japhetite Slavic Dardans from eastern Mediterranean with Japethite Scythic⁶ Dardans-Isedones from the territory of modern Estonia⁷ stretching from their territory passing through ancient port Olbia⁸ and Colchis⁹ all the way to the Balkan Peninsula. In general the myth of Cadmus describes the development of human civilization after the Great Flood which occurred 5,508 years BC according to the ancient Serbian and Russian calendar which was abandoned in Russia in time of emperor Peter the Great and in Serbia in time of King Milan Obrenovic. The myth of Cadmus is also a Balkan Slavic version of the universal myth of Cadmus’s counterpart hero Noah, who with his wife and their three sons with their wives and animals survived the Great Flood in Noah’s Ark on the mountain Ararat and from there they migrated to various sides of the world. Just like the mythical hero Cadmus, after the Great Flood «ancient Serbs-Slavs-Sarmatians» from their ancient homeland in northern Caucasus migrated to various sides of the world «under various names», and among them there were «Serbs-Slavs who lived on the bank of the river Danube». Until a major change which occurred in the world historiography during the 19th century on the basis of antique historical sources there was a consensus in the world historiography that «indigenous people in Sarmatia were the Serbs as the oldest branch of Sarmatians-Slavs» and that in the Balkan-Black Sea region there lived only «one and the same people Serbian-Sarmatian Triballs» or «Sardians» («Sards», «Scordisci or

The Key to the Origin of Slavic People’s Ethnonyms in the Myth of Cadmus

According to the ancient myth of Cadmus, Cadmus from Colchis followed a cow and arrived to the Balkan Peninsula and there he killed by a stone a dragon that guarded the water source of the dragon’s father, who was Thracian god of war Ares (Tyras or Mars)3. Following the advice of goddess of wisdom Athena (Minerva4) Cadmus sowed the teeth of the dragon from which appeared the first people on the Earth Pelasgians «Spartoi»5 – «nomadic»6, gigantic7 warrior-like8 and just9 «Earth-born» people10. The Spartans lived in Sparta or Serbeika – «the land of Serbs» on the mythical mountain Olymp in Greece11 for which a historian Gordon Child claimed that it was built about 3,760 years BC on the river Haliakmon as a cultural province of prehistoric civilization Vinca and the first cultural and educational center of ancient Macedonia12.

and in accordance with their ethnonyme Cadmus is sometimes called Sparton, the son of «the first man and king Toromey»1. Another proof of the mythical link between the antique Serbs from the dynasty of Cadmus and another one of Cadmus’s mythical counterpart hero Heracles (Serbo Makeris)2 is an antique inscription «Serbs Heracleides» located between the cities of Pydna and Dion in the vicinity of the mountain Olymp3. As shown in the myth of Cadmus and in the myths of other similar heroes-counterparts of Cadmus, Cadmus killed the dragon who was the son of Ares and this myth is similar to the myth of Heracles as the son of Aristeus Serbo (Sard) Makeris4 who killed Ares’ son Cycnos5 and did various heroic acts in the Balkan Peninsula6 or the myth of Apollo who killed a snake (dragon) in Delphi oracle in ancient Greece. After the murder of the dragon Cadmus married the goddess of arts and harmony Harmonia7 who was the daughter of King Ares (Mars) and Ares’ wife Aphrodite (Venus Sirbis).8 while the Spartoi, who in the beginning used to kill each other in the wars, calmed down9 and were taught by Harmonia to play the instruments which could cause war-like spirit or peaceful spirit in people10. According to one version of the myth of Cadmus, one family branch of Cadmus’ sons Illyrius, Dardan and Scordisc disappeared with the death of his descendent Oedipus11 while according to another version Cadmus’ descendants and people became some sort of snakes or dragons with a tail attached to human torso12, which was a metaphor for Noah’s oldest son Japhet («Iatus, expandus»13), whose descendants «spread all over the world», as it was written in «Genesis» in Old Testament14. In other words, Cadmus’ descendants, Dardans, were a synonym of Cadmus' oldest son Dardan («Dar-dan-nus» – «glorious Noah») or the pagan god of sea Japhet (also called Neptune, Phorkys or Dagon). The proof of this claim, among other proofs, is a carved relief of the Dardans (Earth born Spartans) with a figure of Japhet as a gigantic Slavic man with a fish tail in Pergamon, or a myth of sirens who seduced sailors in the Bosphore moreus, or a mythic trident of Ruric's Slavs in Ladoga and Novgorod.

Ancient Greeks used to call Cadmus' father Agenor «the father of sea-people Pelasgians» and represented him with a human torso and a fish tail. He also had a trident – the sea god Poseidon from the family of Neptune (Japhet). The translations of Cadmus' homeland Colchis into Greek and Latin (gr. χαλκός, lat. chalcos) as Arabian writers used to call the Slavs or Thracians, who were the first ironsmiths and metallurgists in the world and traded metals, were known as the descendents of Japhets. In other historical sources they were also called by their counterpart ethnonymes Kimmerians and Medes and «med» or «mjed» in the Serbian language means «copper», just like Cadmus's homeland Colchis.

According to Homer, in the trade process «bronze» or «copper» (Pindar, Pythia 3.48) is a «raw metal» and it is a semantic addition to the attributive «red» and it was used by the Slavs. About it see Alinei Mario, Interdisciplinary and linguistic evidence for Palaeolithic continuity of IndoEuropean, Uralic and Altaic populations in Eurasia, with an excursus on Slavic ethnogenesis. these first metallurgists used copper – «halkos» as a medium of exchange¹, just like the people mentioned in the Eighth Book of Rg Veda who used copper coins «shulka»². Their connection with the Balkan Peninsula is proved also by the fact that the ancient settlement Kimmerium in the Black Sea, named by a descendent of Japhet’s oldest son Gomer Kimmerians, was originally named Serberion³. The attribute «red», which is connected to «cadmium» (Cd) – red coloured imperial garment of the first man in the Earth Pelasg or King Agenor, Cadmus’ father⁴, is also applied to Cadmus himself (Pelasg, Peleus) and his wife Harmonia (Thalassa, Teuta) and the descendents of their imperial dynasty.⁵ King Agenor’s red imperial garment is a metaphor for the creation of the first state order with an imperial father figure as the leader and civilizer of primordial primitive humankind following the end of the Great Flood, or in other words, it is a metaphor for the creation of the first states and social institutions, beliefs, customs and manners of the humankind.

Before King Agenor’s son Cadmus gave legislation to the people in the Balkan Peninsula, he firstly had to spread literacy among the people of the Balkan Peninsula⁶, which is proved by the same-

During the 8th century BC these symbols were accepted by Hellenic migrants to Greece⁹ and used until the 5th century BC, when the Athenian tyrant Pisistrat ordered a linguistic revision of the edition of Homer’s Iliad¹⁰. The archeological discovery of the metal used for the production of printing alloys in Theba and its surroundings¹¹ explains the paintings on antique vases representing Cadmus who kills a dragon with a stone and then builds Theba in which literacy and metallurgy developed and both these actions explain the meaning of integral ethnonyme of the Slavs as “liter-

Cadmus' descendents and countrymen were called «sons of Noah's Ark»\(^5\) or «red», «sunny», «shining» Xanthi (its countername is Sirbi)\(^6\), Phoenicians, Erythreians (Russians)\(^7\), etc. These synonymic ethnonymes of people meant «the Reds» and they were connected not only with the imperial red coloured garment of King Agenor, but also with the sun and the image of Cadmus as a metallurgist, or with the so-called «ruda» – raw metal – developed by the early Slavs\(^8\). was considered a «red» man who, like the sun, came from the mountain Ararat in the East, or from Sarmatia, or Dakia Gettica\(^1\), to the Black sea-Balkan region and eastern Mediterranean and this is the reason why the peoples in eastern Mediterranean called him «kedem» («East»)\(^2\) or «ab orientem» («from the East»)\(^3\).

Slavic People as the First Legislators in the Myth of Cadmus

In the Balkan Peninsula Cadmus taught legislation to Athenian people and in this sense the myth about it is identical to the myth of a Scythian philosopher and lawyer Tocharis who had taught the legislation to the Athenians long time before Scythian philosopher Anacharsis and the lawyer Solon did it in the 6th century BC\(^4\). The so-called Solon’s Law or Solon’s Twelve Tablets\(^5\) was only a legal reflection of an ancient Slavic-Aryan Manu’s Law, which was reportedly created by the first man Manu (Noah, or Cadmus’ father King Agenor), and some charters of this ancient Manu’s Law were also present in some charters of the medieval law of the Serbian Emperor Stefan Dušan Nemanjic Dušanov zakonik, although Dušanov zakonik was written in the form of Constitution\(^6\). As for Manu’s Law or Solon’s Law, which was the creation of «Scythian people from the East», the Romans adopted it from the Balkan people in order to stabilize the situation in the Apenine Peninsula after the fall of Etrurian ruler Tarquinius and subsequent decrease of the import of products from eastern states\(^7\). Because of the existing explanation that the notions «Roscan law» in Cicero’s Philippics (2.44) is related to «lex Roscia theatralis» of a Roman official Lucius Roscius Otho\(^8\), the fact that the origin of Roman law, Theodosian Codex and later Constantino-politan and Slavic laws goes back to ancient Slavic legislators and philosophers is widely neglected in the field of humanities. Other legal reflections of Manu’s Law immigrants to Rome, prisoners and slaves from surrounding states as well as the matters of property, money, land possession and the rights of nobles, common citizens and slaves.

In addition to pagan oracles Dodona\(^3\) and Delphi\(^4\), they also established the cult of pagan Eleusine mysteries in Greece,\(^5\) which they named «Eleusia» by their homeland beyond the river Don\(^6\). The concept of «just reign» of Scythian legislators, or Cadmus’ metallurgists «saqlabi»\(^7\) (the Slavs\(^8\) from Colchis), was celebrated in the myths of the Argonauts and «just kings»\(^9\) and in the myth of King Midas who used to make gold of everything he touched,\(^10\) which in the symbolism of antique people meant that King Midas «ruled justly»\(^11\). and to the kings and emperors from medieval Serbian\(^1\), Bulgarian\(^2\), Constantinopolitan\(^3\) and Russian dynasties\(^4\). This cultural, mythological and trade connection of Cadmus and his Slavic-Scythian countrymen who immigrated from the Caucasus and from the Baltic sea and India to the Balkans and spread over the eastern Mediterranean explains another important fact that the so-called Russian «Varjagi» («Variagi»)\(^5\) in the time of Cadmus were called «bhairagi», or the people Jati in India, about whom the Indian historians Sankrityayana and Bim Singh Dahiya explicitly wrote that they were ancestors of modern Russians\(^6\). In Brahmi version of Vedic literature and in Hindu mythology these «Variagi» or «bhairagi» were ascetics («sadhu») who abandoned public life for the purpose of meditation\(^7\) and were considered «holy, just and moral people»\(^8\), just like in antique Greek sources. In addition to this fact, in these sources Cadmus was frequently identified with the pagan god of literacy, shamanism and music Orpheus\(^9\). Therefore in accordance with the role of Cadmus’ wife Harmonia to spread peace, civilization and fine arts worldwide, Cadmus’ countrymen did not practice Dionysian way of shamanism and wild bacchanalias, but Orphic shamanism which was connected with meditation, calmness and asceticism, reflecting the claim of the historian Herodotus that «the Scythians did not like southern customs such as bacchanalias»\(^10\).

The Myth of Cadmus and Orpheus in Serbian Coats of Arms

Rurick’s «Vairagi» who in the time of Constantinopolitan empire used to trade on the route of ancient Olbia-Panticapeum-Phasis and Trabson ports only continued the millennia-long trade route of their ancestors Cadmus’ Slavic Illyrians – Dardans from prehistoric Vinca-Tripolje-Cucuteni civilization. This ancient civilization encompassed the Black sea with its northern tributary rivers and the rivers Danube and Morava in the Balkan Peninsula. In the time of old Roman empire the Balkan Peninsula was considered to be Catena Mundi («Chain of the World»), or in other words, it was considered to be the most strategically important geopolitical spot on the map of the world, as it was a protruded territory directed to the eastern Mediterranean sea and washed by the Black, Adriatic and Aegean seas, with lots of mines full of raw metals, rivers, hot baths and trade roads. Therefore the discoveries of the inscriptions with Orphic old Serbian-Armenian symbols in Olbia, Panticapeum, Phasis and other ports in the Black sea prove that these ports were important meeting centers of the Balkan and Middle Asian cultures. Japethite branch of Cadmus’ descendents used to live in the Mediterranean all the way to northern African Gaza and, according to ancient Assyrian rulers, it was the seacoast of modern Syria and Palestine from where the Japethite descendents, in many historical sources also mentioned as Magi philosophers and ascetics, settled down in the eastern region of the river Tigris. Just like Brahma in India, these Magi people were members of the leading priest cast «bhairagi» («kshatriya», «ksanthi» – the synonym of «Jati» and Scythian worshippers of Heracles also called «Dacians» and «Spartans») in their societies. The myth of Cadmus is similar to Hindu myth of Sarba who killed Narashima, the myth of the Baltic-Indo-Mediterranean «shining» Sandan, Heracles, Dardan, Nergal, Tarhunt or Ksant Sirbis who killed the snake Typhoon (Iluanka) and lions, the myth of the first king of Athens Teseus («Sarba», Tindarius1 or Ksant Sirbis2) who lived in Athens in 1235 BC3 and killed the giant Minotaur4, the myth of Bellerophon who tamed the horse Pegasus or the myth of Perseus who killed the sea-monster Keto5. In this sense Cadmus is also named Pelasg, Japhet, Dardan6, the first king of Colchis Aietes7, Hiponey, the son of Triballus from the family of Serbs Tribals,8 Polyphemus the Slav9, Admetus and his wife Alcestis10, and the myth of the pagan god of literacy11 and music Orpheus12, who with his music tamed wild animals in the Balkans13. The representations of killed or tamed wild boars on Serbian medieval rulers’ coats of arms and the paintings from antic amphorae and vases that connect the hero Cadmus, who killed the dragon, with Orpheus, who tamed wild boars. To crown it all a connection can be traced between Slavic «Variagi» and ascetics, Orphic shamans «bhairagi» and Cadmus’ son Illyrius’ people Illyrians. In this sense it is important to underline one more proof of this connection. The ancient city of Ohrid, which is in modern Macedonia, was related to the cities Ladoga and Novgorod14. Cadmus built the city of Ohrid on a famous «Cadmus’s road» (Via Cadmeia) which connected the Adriatic Sea with the south and north of the Balkan Peninsula and is called Via Egnatia today15. The inhabitants of the ancient Ohrid were Slavic Illyrians who traditionally wore the symbol of a wild boar on their helmets as a ritual symbol of imperial reign and heroism\(^1\), because back in the ancient time people believed that only a wise, masculine and moral man was capable of killing wild boars\(^2\). The proof of this belief is the ancient symbol of a wild boar pierced by an arrow which used to be represented on the Serbian coats of arms and flags throughout the history\(^4\). Such a coat of arms is also the proof of the continuity of the Serbian civilisation on the Balkan Peninsula from prehistory to contemporary age, taking into consideration the fact that Constantinopolitan historians used to name Serbian medieval kings of various generations «the rulers of the Serbs Triballs»\(^4\).

there is a couple of Cadmus and Harmonia driven by the pagan solar god Apollo in the carriage pulled by a tamed and domesticated lion and a wild boar. In this painting Cadmus is a masculine hero showing to his wife Harmonia, in accordance with the tradition of Ancient Greece and Macedonia, the caught and tamed prey – the wild boar – as a symbol of his masculinity\(^5\). In addition to this, on this vase the figures of Cadmus and Apollo personify also the myth of Orpheus who received the lyre from Apollo and instead of killing wild animals started to tame them. The peaceful tamer of wild animals Orpheus unified the concept of music with the earliest forms of philosophy, theology and legislation\(^6\), and that was also the concept and attribute of the famous Thracian «horse tamer» as a «hero civilizer», which had been attached to the whole branch of the Slavic people and produced other synonymic ethnonymes – Thracians, Illyrians, Triballs and Dardans from the dynasty of «Serbs Heracleides». In addition to one more explanation of the myth of Cadmus, it is necessary to mention Hyginius’ Fabulae in which Apollo in the Scythian oracle in Delphi prophesied to King Adrastus that his two daughters would get married to two young men who would kill a lion and a wild boar. His future sons-in-law Tadeus and Polynick, the son of Cadmus’ descendant Oedipus, appeared before King Adrastus dressed in the skins of a lion and wild boar, which reflected the custom of the noble men to hunt wild boars in Theba\textsuperscript{3}, and so King Adrastus gave a permission to his daughters to merry the two young nobles\textsuperscript{4}. In line with the name and function of Cadmus’ wife Harmonia, the tamed lion and wild boar who pull the carriage with the married couple are also a metaphor for Aesop’s fable Lion, Wild Boar and Vultures about a lion and wild boar fighting over the water at the water source and when seeing the nearby vultures realized that they had to make peace with each other if they wanted to survive and continue living. As the wild boar was a metaphor for a strong and wild man, the presence of Cadmus’ wife Harmonia in the carriage pulled by domesticated animals is a metaphor for pre-Christian and Christian understanding of asceticism, tolerance and harmony which calmed down the rage and ferocity of the first people who used to fight against each other and tame wild animals. Harmonia used to be represented, just like pagan goddesses Athena, Minerva, Darda (Сарда, Сара, Venus Sirbis) or Benzaiten, with the instrument in her hands, which stood for creative arts and science and symbolized the knowledge creating harmony in the world.

lance near Vrsac city in contemporary Serbia a clayed peace of carts was discovered with a clay driver as a metaphor for the solar god Apollo pulled by three clayed ducks «dromitas», dating from 1500–1200 BC, which is approximately the same age when the mythical hero Cadmus came to the Balkans. These clayed ducks «dromitas» were a metaphor for ancient Russian (northern Serbian) navigators Obodrites, also called «dromitas» (Δρομῖται), «the nomads» in historical sources, who «inhabited the area from Siberia to Greek Peloponnese», among which the most famous were the tribes of Dragovici and Krivici on the Peloponnese, known also in historical sources as «Illyrian Serbs Triballs» who «speak» («slave») and so they were called «Sloveni» (the Slavs) or «Slavni» (the glorious ones), but also they were known as «the people of Bulgarian King Krum» in 8131.

All these above mentioned facts prove that the ancient Slavs were engaged in the creation of the first significant elements of human civilization, science and arts after the Great Flood, including the mythology that testifies to it. Also at the same time the myth of Cadmus proves that the Serbs, Russians and other Slavic people created their own states, social institutions and achievements, such as legislation, marriage, philosophy, metallurgy, navigation, mythology and fine arts much earlier than it was presented in their official educational systems. Therefore it is possible to conclude that in fact the first ancient Caucasian-Balkanian-eastern Mediterranean legislation after the Great Flood was created by ancient Slavic legislators and philosophers and that the so-called «Greek/Roman» mythology describes the creation of ancient Slavic civilization, and that it was later taken over and retold in various versions by other peoples in the eastern Mediterranean.
