The Eighteenth-Century Origins of Angina Pectoris: Predisposing Causes, Recognition and Aftermath

by

LEON MICHAELS

(Medical History, Supplement No. 21)

London
The Wellcome Trust Centre for the History of Medicine at UCL
2001
Contents

List of Illustrations, Tables, and Figures
page vii

Acknowledgements
page xi

Abbreviations
page xiii

Terminology and definitions
page xv

I Introduction
page 1

II Historical Evidence
page 8
- The Impact of William Heberden
  page 8
- The Earlier Years
  page 10
- The Contemporaries of William Heberden
  page 21

III Population Trends: The Eighteenth Century and Earlier
page 28

IV The Agricultural Revolution
page 44

V The Impact of the Agricultural Revolution on Food: The Cardiac Consequences
page 61
- Fats: Saturated and Unsaturated
  page 61
- Dietary Fats and Coronary Heart Disease
  page 66
- Faith and Fish
  page 75
- Fibre
  page 78
- Sugar
  page 82
- Coffee
  page 89
- Menus and Meals
  page 99

VI Tobacco
page 108

VII High Blood Pressure
page 114
- Obesity
  page 114
- Fibre
  page 119
- Salt
  page 120

VIII Stress
page 125

IX Exercise
page 137
Contents

| Section                                                                 | Page |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------|------|
| X  Susceptibility and Resistance                                        | 143  |
| XI The Interplay of Risk Factors                                       | 152  |
| XII The Aftermath                                                      | 156  |
|   Angina Pectoris Comes of Age                                         | 156  |
|   Modern Times                                                         | 163  |
| XIII Rebuttals, Rejoinders and Refutations                             | 172  |
|   Negative Evidence                                                    | 172  |
|   Early Descriptions of Possible Angina Pectoris                      | 173  |
|   Coronary Heart Disease Frequency in the Absence of                   | 173  |
|   Traditional Risk Factors                                            |      |
|   Pathological Evidence of Coronary Arterial and Heart Disease         | 175  |
|   before 1768                                                          |      |
|   Aortic and Coronary Ostial Stenoses                                  | 178  |
| XIV Conclusion                                                         | 180  |

* Bibliography                                                           | 185  |

* Index                                                                 | 207  |
The Eighteenth-Century Origins of Angina Pectoris

(Medical History, Supplement No. 21)
Frontispiece: William Heberden (1710–1801). Mezzotint by J Ward after Sir W Beechey (Wellcome Library, London).
