The Socio-cultural Context of Dirges among the Akan People in the Ejisu Communities in the Ashanti Region of Ghana: Aesthetics and Intonation

Kwaku Owusu-Agyeman
Vice Principal, St. Monica's College of Education, Ghana

John Kofi Brewu
Vice Principal, Akrokerri College of Education, Ghana

Abstract:
This study analyses the aesthetics and intonations of dirges premised on the socio-cultural context of the Akan people in the Ejisu Communities in the Ashanti Region of Ghana. The study used ethnographic research case study design. Observation, video recording, interview guide and focus group discussion were used to glean data from five professional dirge performers. The findings were presented in quotations. The study found four major themes in the dirges performed among the Akan people in the study area. These include ‘Agyaadwo’, ‘Benab’, ‘Mamobo’ and ‘Kwadwo’. The study further found that when the prosody of Akan dirges is considered, it is clear that there is no even beat in a piece as a whole, though there is a scattered use of prosodic patterns of various kinds throughout the dirge. Again, the study found the rhythm of Akan dirges to be free in the sense that there is no handclapping or percussion accompaniment to the singing, nor is it intended for dancing. The codification of indigenous Akan dirges is imperative as it sustains the socio-cultural identity of the Akan people. The economic potentials of dirge can also be harnessed as the study found performers who used it as their major source of livelihood.

Keywords: Dirge, Akan people, accompaniment, Ejisu Communities, Melodic contours

1. Introduction
Various explanations and interpretations have been given as to what a dirge means. A dirge is a mournful poem or piece of music composed or performed as a memorial to a dead person (Alembi, 2002). It is a musical piece of music composed or performed as a memorial to a dead person (Alembi, 2008). Again, it has been defined as the musical piece that is performed as a part of the funeral service (Nketia, 1969; XIAO & WU, 2010). It is a hymn or song of mourning composed to dedicate in the memory of a dead person. The song laments and expresses grief for the lost one. The synonyms of the word dirge are threnody, requiem, and lament (Boadi, 2013; Gai-Hua, 2010). The tone of the song is somber and soulful. It is a slow, mournful musical composition. A dirge is again seen as a weeping song lamenting on the feeling of the performer based on the affection he or she has for the deceased. It is an unplanned or unprogrammed type of music which comes just out of shock and moved by the emotion of the singer who sings the weeping son. It is an unplanned or unprogrammed type of music which comes just out of shock and moved by the emotion of the singer who sings the weeping son.

In all these, a dirge is arranged in such a way that the name of the dead, his appellation, where he comes from, the family or clan, his good works, the pains the family is going through among others are mentioned (Enszer, 2002). There is for each clan and in particular for the lineages within it, a set of dirges, each of which may contain a reference to someone who might have been a common ancestress, patriarch, a leader, a ruler, or simply a lineage head (Hai-feng, 2006; Xiao-liang, 2007). Hence nearly every dirge would be found to contain some personal names. For example, when an Akan person dies, a portion of the dirge to be sung for him is predetermined by the clan or lineage to which he belongs.

In the performance of dirges, there are themes which throw light on features which might otherwise seem puzzling or banal (Hui-ling, 2012). The deceased is the focal point. He/she may be addressed, his individual qualities described, or he may be identified with one or several ancestors. To refer to him the mourner often uses a series of different names which vary the language as well as honouring the dead. Besides proper names the Akan also have corresponding ‘by-names’ and these often occur in dirge for effective reasons (Nketia, 1969). Beside these names, the deceased is also addressed by kinship terms and terms of endearment. Again, a name of reference may be used to associate him with his clan or group (Boadi, 2013). Qualities are often dwelt on benevolence in particular is frequently lauded in the dirges (Junli, 2014).

While the person of the deceased is the focus of attention, there are other themes. One of the most frequent is that of the ancestor. Among the Akan, ancestry is important, both through the mother and through the father who represents the spiritual ancestor (Nketia, 1969; Boadi, 2013). In dirges both types of ancestry are commemorated, and the fact brought out that a member of two social groups has been lost (Alembi, 2008). Rather similar to the theme of ancestors is that of places. The identity of the deceased or his ancestors is clarified by adding the name of his home or place of origin (Wen-jin, 2005; Khanmohammadi & Dowlati, 2018). This convention often introduces historic evocations into a dirge. It also adds colour to the words, for it is common for a descriptive phrase to be added to the name itself. While the main focus of the dirge is on the deceased his nature and qualities, his ancestors, his historic home the mourner also makes certain reflections (Lifeng, 2012; Raflis, & Zai, 2018). There are certain stock ways in which these are expressed. The dead man is often pictured as setting out on a journey, so that part of what the mourner is doing is bidding him farewell (Mark, 2008; Lishi, 2013; Unger, 2016). For instance, the sorrow of parting is brought out in stock phrases like ‘I call him, but vain’, ‘I would weep blood if only that would make you come back’, or with more passionate emphasis on the mourner’s sense of loss, ‘I am in flooded water, who will recue, me?’ and ‘There is no branch above which I could grasp’. The mourner’s wishes for a continued friendship with the dead person even when he/she reaches the world of spirits, and speaks of wishing to go with him/her or to exchange gifts or messages (Nketia, 1969; Sanka, 2010; Su, 2016); and this is why the singer so often say: ‘send me something when someone is coming’. This is an imagination rather than a literal request (Tsiwah, 2009; Boadi, 2013; Smith & Kouri, 2018).

It is imperative to note that the mourner expresses her sorrow and loss through particular concrete images rather than through general statements about death (Posner, 2003; Mu, 2011). For example, instead of speaking of death taken away her support, she sings ‘The tree that gives shade and coolness has been hewn down’ and when she alludes to the shortness of life, she uses the conventional metaphor in which the duration of life is compared to the time a market woman takes to sell her goods: ‘What were your wares that they are sold out so quickly?’ Among all these various motifs and conventions of content and expression the individual mourner can select her own. The use of many of the stock forms of expression does not necessarily mean a lack of sincerity on her part or that she creates little artistic impact (Saanchi, 2002; Qian-zhi, 2004; Yun-xiao, 2012). As Nketia (1969) puts it, ‘the traditional forms of expression are still pregnant with emotion on the Akan expressions which are not considered outworn in spite of frequent use’.

Dirges known in Akan as ‘Nsuiε’ is one of the oral traditions, described as elegiac poetry, is an exceedingly common form of expression in Africa. We hear of it from all areas and in many different forms. In Ghana, many tribes and communities do perform dirges and Akan communities are no exception. In trying to find out the socio-cultural context of dirges, the researchers restricted themselves to Ejisu communities. Ejisu is a town in the Ashanti Region of Ghana and it is the head of administration for the Ejisu Municipality. Ejisu is located in the South-Eastern part of Kumasi with different cultures (ethnic groups). Asante Twi is the common language spoken by almost everybody. These are the very people that the researchers want to talk about taking into consideration, the performance of dirges amongst them.

2. Materials and Methods

The research design is an ethnographic case study approach. This research is an investigation into dirges and how they are rendered among the Akans in Ejisu Municipality in the Ashanti Region. In the course of gathering information for this study, these researchers have had to rely on two main types of data. These are the primary data and the secondary data. The primary was collected during funerals among professional dirge performers in the study areas. To collect this data, the researchers had to interview five professional dirge performers from different communities. The choice of the five dirge performers was motivated by two factors: the level of popularity or the level of appreciation that listeners show for the performances of the bards, and the location of the bards such that they are fairly distributed in the different study areas. All the five professional dirge performers were women. Besides this, separate interviews were conducted with some elders in the study areas where the five professional dirge performers were observed. All the interviews were conducted on face-to-face, and on one-to-one bases (Saunders et al., 2007).

The researchers also visited funeral grounds at Ejisu and Akyawkrom where live performances of dirges were recorded on audio cassettes, and pictures at such funerals taken. The contextual meanings of dirges recorded were first explained to the researchers by some of the professional dirge performers themselves at the funerals. Such dirges were transcribed, translated, and presented in quotations. Apart from the recorded dirges and the pictures which were taken at the funeral grounds, information on interviews conducted with poet-cantors, elders, and other natives were presented in themes.

3. Results and Analysis

The study found the themes of dirges among the people in the study area. During the writers’ interactions with the interviewees, they gathered that there were four main themes of dirges that are occasionally performed within the communities. The first one is called ‘Agyaadwo’ (screaming). With this theme, the performer performs the dirge as a result of an unexpected shock or pain she has received. In other words, when the performer hears or gets the news that somebody, she is not expecting him to die but she is unexpectedly told that such a person is dead. In that sense, the performer as a result of the shocking news gets up, shouts or screams, finding it difficult to stand at one place, weeps and wails to show the pains she is going through. Examples are shown below:

Bue, mawu oo! Alas, I’m dead
Anyaa so oo! It’s finished Mawie oo! I’ve finished Adeε aye me oo! I’m in pains Mahuu amane oo! I’m going through pains Yaanom obi mnra o! Somebody should come to my rescue
The performer repeats herself or repeats these short sentences over and over again to show the pains she is going through and how shocking the news is to her.

The study further found the second theme of a dirge the researchers gathered from Ejisu community is called ‘Benab’.

The study found two main types of this theme. The first type is the one that they use to cast insinuations. It is believed in the Akan culture that when a young person dies or a rich man dies unexpectedly or even when he is having litigation with somebody and dies, they suspect that his death might have been caused by someone, who could be his opponent or a witch. For instance, if his death is suspected to be as a result of his having litigation with the other person, some of the texts in the dirge can go like this;

Atamfo afere oo !! My enemies have been put to shame!
εbo adwo oo  !! You’ve got what you wanted

The other type of ‘Benab’ is used to send a message or inform the townsfolk about what is happening to the performer. It normally has something to do with happenings in the bush or the forest (somebody dying as a result of bush fires, felling of trees) or somebody traveled somewhere but the unexpected happened to him or her and will want to inform the community.

The study found the third type of a dirge among the Ejisu communities called ‘mmnb’. The Akan believe that death is a journey. So, in the olden days when someone is at a point of death, they believed that he is embarking on a journey. Therefore, the soul leaves the body and sets off for that journey. In this regard, some of the family members get to the outskirts of the village or town and shout to call his soul which they believed was running away from the person. With this type of dirge, the performer does not shed any tears but just calls the person’s name, for instance;

Ama eel! ....
Ama Seewaa eel!.....

The fourth theme the study discovered of dirge is called ‘Kwadwom’. Like ‘mmnb’ the performer of ‘kwadwom’ does not normally shed tears but the texts in the dirge show grief and sorrow. The tone of the song is somber and soulful which sends grief into the spine of audience who may shed tears.

4. Examples of Dirges

| Twi | English |
|---------------------------------|----------|
| Eno Atwemaa Mansa | Mother Atwemaa Mansa |
| Aduana dehye - preko a woda asaa soc | Royal of Aduana clan who sleeps on rich cotton fabric |
| εnowaa, wote wo din a te w’ani | Mother respond I am calling you |
| Jheneba, woduru kurotia a | Princess, when you reach the outskirts of the town, |
| Bɔ wo din ma abranee mma wo so | Mention your name so that strong men might carry you shoulder high |
| Na wodi amantire mu | For you rule two worlds |
| Atwemaa Mansa | Atwemaa Mansa |
| Aduana ba – Atwea Yaa nana a wofiri Atwea | Daughter of Aduana and grandchild of Atwea Yaa who hail from Atwea |
| Gyampɔ Mmosea soc | Gyampɔ Mmoseaso |
| Jheneba a wofiri Asumagya Gyankobaa | Princess who comes from Asumagya |
| Daamere Kwadu reso borofere | where the pawpaw fruit grows on the banana tree |
| Apokyerene nana a ɔma nsuo | Grandchild of the frog that produces water |
| Asumagya Santemanso | Asumagya Santemanso |
| Gyebiri Amanfo nana Asumegyani a | One who hail from Asumegy and grandchild of Gyebiri Amanfo |
| Wɔbɔɔ bidie a anka obi awuɔ | Someone would die if you smeared yourself with charcoal dust |
| Busumuruni banyansafɔɔ | Wise woman of Busumurunu clan |
| Eno, aden na wada nahɔɔ sei | Mother, why have you slept so deep today |
| Eno, nyane na adeg akye | Mother wake up it is a bright morning |
| ɔnowaa Atwemaa te ase a | If mother Atwemaa were to be alive |
| Anka madidi dadaada | I would have eaten already |
| Merenya obi akọse Amoako Ata, Gyambibi ne | Can I get somebody to send message |
| Afrane se, ɔnowaa tuo akabea na mahunu amane sei ee | to Amoako Ata, Gyambibi and Afrane that Mother has left her gun somewhere for me to fight/struggle in vain! |
| Maame, obi rela a mane yen | Mother, send us something when someone is coming this way. |
| Na se woremane yen a | If you would send us something |
| Mane yen denkyembreboɔ | I would like parched corn |
| Na se yeany gya a | So that we could not find fire to cook it |
| Yeawo no amono | We could eat it raw. |

Table 1
Table 2

| Twi | English |
|-----|---------|
| Nana Kwaagyei Hwedeemuni nana a nom Abono, | Grandchild of grandsire Kwaagyei of Hwedeemu that drinks the water of Abono |
| Kyeame ba kyeameewaa, | Daughter of a spokesman, who is her self a spokesman, |
| Eno, eee enhia me, na mereko | Mother, it may appear all is well with me, but I am struggling. |
| Òsafo Agyeman nana Nyaakowaa Antaadeni | Nyaakowaa of Anteade and grand child of Òsafo Agyeman |
| Eno, eee enhia me, na mereko. | O, mother I am struggling all is not as well as it appears. |
| Eno, woremame a, mane me boa ne sënkekse - gye-ahchoo | Mother, if you would send me some gye-ahchoo thing, I would like a parcel and a big cooking pot that entertains strangers. |
| Òpem adi ngo; asumanpakyiwa adi hyire | The god Òpem has failed, the gourd of charms has won |
| Eno, ahunu mu nni me dua bi na masu mu | O mother, there is no branch above which I could grasp. |
| Eno, woremame mea, mane me denkyenbrebo | Mother, if you would send me some thing, I would like parched corn, |
| Na manya gya a, mawe no mono not find fire to cook it. | So that I could eat it raw if I could |
| Eno, nkoko de boro bekum ako | Mother, the parrot will catch a skin disease from the fowls and die. |
| Nana Kwaagyei Hwedeemuni nana nom Abono | Grandchild of grandsire Kwaagyei of Hwedeemu that drinks Abono |
| Nana sënkekse - gye-ahchoo | Grandsire, the mighty pot, savior of strangers |
| Eno as e enhia me oo, na mereko oo | O, mother I am struggling all is not as well with me as it appears |
| Eno manemanefoo, obi reba a mane me oo | Mother, who sends gifts, send me something when someone is coming this way. |
| Eno afituo mu nni gya oo na masu bioo | Mother, there is no fire in the deserted dwelling from which I could take a brand to light my fire |
| Mete kyirekyire-amoa- yi-me- nkyen-sodo | My helpful wicker basket that comes to my aid with lumps of stored up salt. |
| Eno, otire ba nsu, anka masu wo nkra | O, mother, I would weep blood for you, if only Otire's child would be allowed to. |
| Nana nwaanwaakɔ a onim sika dabe | Grandsire, the crab that knows the hiding place of alluvial gold, |
| Too deeben ni oo, kyeame ba? | What is the matter, child of the spokesman? |
| Eno ama owuo yi afu yen mu | Mother has allowed this death to take me by surprise |
| As e enhia me oo, na mereko oo | O, mother, I am struggling, all is not as well with me as it appears |

5. Discussion of Results

The study focused on aesthetic and intonations of dirges of the Akan people in the Ejisu Municipality. Four major themes were found among the Akan dirges in the Ejisu communities. The study found that when the prosody of Akan dirges is considered, it is clear that there is no even beat in a piece as a whole, though there is a scattered use of prosodic patterns of various kinds throughout the dirge. Stress is not significant and there is not systematic use of tones or syllables. There is however, a diffused occurrence of tonal and phonological patterns. These depend on the nature of the line or linear units in dirges. These findings confirm that of Nketia (1969) that tones of dirges among other Akans do not follow... any particular systematic order. The study found repetition of tones patterns to occur within lines. In each preceded by a low tone, and the repetition of the low-high sequence is noticeable. This finding corroborates Boadi (2013).

The study found two different ways of singing dirges. The first is to adopt a type of wailing voice in which the words of the dirge are ‘spoken’ and the contours of the melody reflect the speech contours of the performer, sometimes accompanied by a few tuneful fragments. The other form is more purely musical. A fairly normal singing voice is used, with melodic contours resembling those of songs. However, this study found a general tendency for dirge melodies to begin high and move down to a low resting point at the close. It is revealing to note that some traditional tunes associated with fragments of dirges, but in the main which ever musical mode she employs, the singer makes up her own tunes as she goes along. This is not different from Boadi (2013), Alembi (2008), Nketia (1969) and Saanchi (2002) who found that traditional tunes are associated with fragments of dirges in their respective studies.

The study further found that unlike many other types of songs, the rhythm of Akan dirges is free in the sense that there is no handclapping or percussion accompaniment to the singing, nor is it intended for dancing. This in conjunction with the fact that the mourner herself acts as both soloist and chorus, gives the individual mourner greater scope to treat the subject in her own manner without reference to others, and to express her own feelings in the words and melodies she chooses. Again, the study found that during the performance the women who sing the dirges pace about among those attending the funeral, pausing before the corpse or the chief mourners. Though there is no dancing to dirges the singer makes gestures and gracefully rocks her head to add to the pathos of what she sings.

6. Conclusion and Policy Implications
The study found four major themes of dirge among the Akan people in the Ejisu municipality. It has also revealed that dirges are not normally on organized performance, so the individual can draw her own resources and originality to express and evoke the emotion she is expected to feel.

Like in other Akan communalities and other ethnic groups, dirges are performed traditionally in a disorganized chorus. Every singer sings her dirge without listening to the other. There is therefore no coherence – no definite start and no definite end. However, the study identified some people who are trained to sing dirges which they do and are paid for. This draws attention to the economic potentials of dirge as funerals are major traditional activities observed among the Akans. Again, the codification of indigenous Akan dirges is implied to be significant as it sustains the socio-cultural identity of the Akan people.

7. Reference
i. Alembi, E. (2008). The Abanyole Dirge: ‘Escorting’ The Dead with Song And Dance; http://www.folklore.uee/folklore/vol38/alembi.pdf
ii. Alembi, E. (1993). Aspects of Theatre in Pre-Colonial Kenya. A research paper presented at the French Cultural Centre in Nairobi, Kenya.
iii. Alembi, E. (2002). The Construction of the Abanyole Perceptions on Death through Oral Funeral Poetry. Doctoral dissertation defended at the University of Helsinki in Finland. Available at http://ethesis.helsinki.fi/julkaisut/hum/kult/vk/alembi/theconst.pdf.
iv. Boadi, A. L. (2013). Remarks on J. H. Nketia’s Funeral Dirges of the Akan People; Legion Journal of the HUMANITIES Volume 24
v. Cai-Hua, Z. E. N. G. (2010). On the Correction of Xie Daoyun’s Birth Year and Death Year. Journal of Liuzhou Teachers College, (1), 14.
vi. Chun-Jing, W. A. N. G. (2006). A Dirge of Modern Indian Women: An Interpretation of RK Narayan’s Novel the Dark Room. Journal of Pla University of Foreign Languages, (5), 21.
vii. Enszer, J. R. (2002). Mary’s dirge. Iris: A Journal About Women, 43-45.
viii. Hai-feng, X. I. A. O. (2006). The Dirge to our National Soul— On The Story of Hulan River Written by Xiao Hong. Journal of Baicheng Normal College, (5), 12.
ix. Hui-ling, Z. H. O. U. (2012). Singing Tragically a Dirge in the Folk Land——on CHI Zi-jian’s Novel Writing. Humanities & Social Sciences Journal of Hainan University, (3), 8.
x. Junli, Z. (2014). The Last Melancholy Dirge of the Death in ‘The Raven’. Journal of Language and Literature Studies, (2), 28.
xi. Khanmohammadi, M. H., & Dowlati Siab, A. (2018). The Socioeconomic Status of Men in Laki’ Moya’(An Elegiac Dirge). Half-Yearly Persian Language and Literature, 26(84), 115-131.
xii. Lifeng, M. (2012). On the Position of ‘The Dirge to Tao the Hermit’ by Yan Yanzhi in the Recepticle History about Tao Yuanming. Academic Monthly, (1), 18.
xiii. Lishi, C. H. E. N. (2013). Dirge about Love and Hymn of Affection Analysis of TV Play Legend of Concubine ZHEN Huan. Journal of Chongqing Jiaotong University (Social Sciences Edition), (2), 20.
xiv. Mark, D. B. (2008). Interpreting the music of drug-eluting stents: halcyon song or albatross dirge?
xv. Mu, H. (2011). A Dirge and Elegy for the Peasant Uprising——On the Novel of Ba’de Ballad. Journal of Wuzhou University, (6), 13.
xvi. Nketia, J. H. (1969). Funeral dirges of Akan. U. K.: Oxford University Press.
xvii. Posner, R. A. (2003). Misappropriation: A Dirge. Hous. L. Rev., 40, 621.
xviii. Qian, Z. H. A. O. (2004). A Heart-shaking Dirge of the Female——Analysing the Female Figures in Lumin’s Work of THE SISTERS IN THE MIRROR. Journal of Hunan Padio and Febevision University, (2), 19.
xix. Raflis, R., & Zai, J. R. (2018). Figurative Languages in William Shakespeare's Poem: a Fairy Song, a Madrigal, Bridal Song, Dirge, and Sonnet 116. Jurnal Ilmiah Langue and Parole, 2(1), 53-58.
xx. Saanchi, J. A. (2002). Linguistics parallelism and the Dagaaba dirge. New directions in Ghanaian linguistics, 409-423.
xxi. Sanka, C. G. (2010). The Sisaala Dirge: a critical analysis, Kumasi: A thesis, Doctor of Philosophy (Unpublished). xxii. Saunders, M., Lewis, P. & Thornhill, A. (2007). Research Methods for Business Students, Fourth Edition, Essex: Pearson Education Limited.
xxiii. Smith, J., & Kouri, S. (2018). Schizoanalysis, Counselling Praxis and a Sandbox Dirge. In Principles of Transversality in Globalization and Education (pp. 211-225). Springer, Singapore.
xxiv. Su, W. (2016). Another Look at Xie Chong’s Tomb Inscription of the Southern Dynasties’ Song Regime. Journal of Gugong Studies, (2), 1.
xxv. Tsiwah, C. (2009). The Syntax of the Ahanta Noun Phrase. M.Phil Thesis, University of Education, Winneba.
xxvi. Unger, J. (2016). Lamenting What We HADD? A Fisheries Act Habitat Dirge or Much Ado About Nothing?. Journal of Environmental Law and Practice, 29, 1. xxvii. Wen-jin, C. A. I. (2005). About the First Essay on Tao Yuanming— The Commentary on A Dirge to Jingjie Hermit and Its Preface by Yan Yannian. Journal of Yangzhou Polytechnic College, (1), 1.
xxviii. XIAO, Z. Y., & WU, Y. J. (2010). Elegy, Dirge and Warsong——On Mu Mutian’s Northeast Complex with His Poetry as Examples. Journal of Inner Mongolia University for Nationalities (Social Sciences), (3), 14.
xxix. Xiao-liang, C. H. E. N. (2007). Music Aesthetic Ideas in Sound without Dirge [J]. Journal of Xidian University (Social Science Edition), 3.
xxx. Yahalom, J. (2010). Come Back to the Fold, My Beloved One: A Fifteenth-Century Hebrew Dirge on the Fate of Spanish Jewry. Frankfurter Judaistische Beiträge, 36, 69-83.
xxxi. Yun-xiao, Z. H. O. N. G. (2012). ‘Who ‘on Earth Writes the Lotus Girl Dirge for’ whom?’ Journal of Tongren University, (4), 13.