Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media

Rita Himmel
Centro de Línguas, Literaturas e Culturas, Departamento de Línguas e Culturas, Universidade de Aveiro, Portugal

Maria Manuel Baptista
Centro de Línguas, Literaturas e Culturas, Departamento de Línguas e Culturas, Universidade de Aveiro, Portugal

Abstract
The process of establishing the supranational European Union has been accompanied by a construction of the idea of Europeanness (Geary, 2013; Pieterse, 1991/1993), of belonging to a common us, creating an idea of what we are, as Europeans, and necessarily othering those who do not belong (Butler & Spivak, 2007; El-Tayeb, 2011). The so-called “refugee/migration crisis” is a particularly interesting context in which to explore discourses not only about this us/them divide regarding what are presented as non-Europeans, but also who we Europeans are constructed as being. The media play an important role in the reproduction of representations about others, with whom the audience does not have direct contact. In this article, we explore discourses, in the Portuguese and German media, from 2011 to 2017, about the so-called “refugee/migration crisis”. Through a qualitative content analysis, we have sought to understand how the idea of Europeanness is constructed, in relation to this phenomenon. This exploratory analysis allowed us to identify that there is not only a construction of the idea of Europe in which migrants or refugees are the other, but also of an idea of Europe that is intrinsically incompatible with the rejection of this other, incompatible with far-right or xenophobic ideas and movements. Being European, thus, is being not a Muslim, not a refugee, and not xenophobic.

Keywords
refugee crisis; Europe; media discourses; othering
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

contacto direto. Neste artigo, exploramos discursos, nos média portugueses e alemães, de 2011 a 2017, sobre a chamada “crise dos refugiados/migratória”. Através de uma análise qualitativa de conteúdo, procuramos compreender como é construída a ideia de europeidade em relação a este fenômeno. Esta análise exploratória permitiu identificar que não existe apenas uma construção da ideia da Europa, na qual os migrantes ou refugiados são o outro, mas também uma ideia da Europa intrinsecamente incompatível com a rejeição desse outro, incompatível com ideias e movimentos de extrema direita ou xenófobos. Ser europeu, portanto, é ser não-muçulmano, ser não-refugiado, e ser não-xenófobo.

Palavras-chave
crise dos refugiados; Europa; discursos mediáticos; alteridade

Us and Them in the media

Cultural Studies have revolved around a critical approach to the concept of culture, deconstructing both its classical anthropological as well as its cultural production configurations. Seeing culture as transversal to all levels of social life, being much more complex and contradictory than traditionally theorized, the field has had an enormous contribution in contesting essentialist theories and concepts, such as that of identity, in its various forms, namely national identity, as an “imagined community” (Anderson, 1983/2016). We are particularly interested in the discursive interplay between this particularly strong and institutionally supported collective identity and the supranational European imagined community, which has been promoted, appropriated and constructed along with the process of political and economic integration, since “increasingly the citizens of the European Union are being evoked as a different imagined community: as Europeans, an identity perhaps as problematic as the particularist National identities it is intended to replace” (Geary, 2013, p. 39). European Nation-States have been built on the basis of contradictory discourses about their origins. With the birth of the European Community, the idea of Europe as a cohesive whole became an important part of European integration, raising the question of “what are the new National myths on which a European National identity might be based?” and, a maybe even more important question, “what might be the dangers of such a new identity?” (Geary, 2013, p. 45).

The perils, one could argue, can be the same as those raised by the idea of the Nation-State, namely, who gets to “sing it” (Butler & Spivak, 2007), who is allowed to be a part of us or not (Butler & Spivak, 2007; El-Tayeb, 2011), who is othered, what performances are accepted, since, as Judith Butler explains, the State (which we expand to also mean the European supranational State) “can signify the source of non-belonging, even produce that non-belonging as a quasi-permanent state” (Butler & Spivak, 2007, p. 4).

The non-Europeans arriving at Europe’s borders raise the issue of the construction of Europeanness in a particularly strong way. The production and reaffirmation of a particular discourse about us, could, as argued, be expanded from the imagined community of the Nation-State to the European supranational realm, creating a European source of non-belonging, as Fatima El-Tayeb argues:

> the continued inability or rather unwillingness to confront, let alone overcome, the glaring whiteness underlying Europe’s self-image has rather drastic consequences for migrants and minority communities routinely ignored, marginalized, and defined as a threat to the very Europe they are part of, their presence usually only acknowledged as a sign of crisis and forgotten again in the ongoing construction of a new European identity. (El-Tayeb, 2011, p. xxv)

The context of the so-called “refugee crisis” has a strong potential of allowing us to understand what discourses appear in the media regarding collective identities as tied to political belonging, which of them are rendered subaltern and which are presented as common sense (i.e. hegemonic). We refer to it as a “so-called crisis” because the use of the concept of “crisis” as commonsensical already frames the issue in a certain way, it “is a choice that is steeped in racial, gender, and colonialist politics” (Nawyn, 2018, p. 1).

> While crisis language can also motivate quick action and additional resources for refugees, in the current climate refugees are the losers in crisis language, as it has motivated hardened borders rather than compassionate assistance and protection. (Nawyn, 2018, p. 14)

And the same idea is reinforced by Fatima El-Tayeb (2011):

> the scant references to migratory movements that are present show them as a very recent phenomenon, largely reduced to stories of desperate refugees – presenting migration firstly as an anomaly, caused by some kind of crisis in the region of origin and secondly as something that happens to Europe without the continent having any active part in it. (El-Tayeb, 2011, p. 166)

The media play an extremely important role in this process of constructing the barriers between us and them, mainly in the reproduction of representations about others, with whom the audience does not have direct contact. Narratives are constantly retold in every news story, resonating with previous stories, creating the sensation of an “infinitely repeated drama” (Rock, 1981, quoted in Bird & Dardenne, 1999, p. 268), while journalists operate under the illusion of simply using the most efficient technical methods to portray reality according to objective criteria of the news values of immediacy, unusualness, simplicity. But the way in which these stories are told, drawing from narrative codes such as villains and heroes (Bird & Dardenne, 1999, pp. 269, 275), is not simply a neutral technique to make news items more engaging, it reflects culturally pre-established “maps of meaning” (Hall, 1993). The media have a noteworthy amount of power to define and redefine these narratives, since “the telling of a story necessarily excludes all other stories that are never told” (Bird & Dardenne, 1999, p. 277). This power is especially strong in mainstream media outlets (Chomsky, 1997) since news stories are part of a set of practices socially regarded as trustworthy, and with the medium acting as an authority figure towards the public (Bird & Dardenne, 1999, p. 275). Thus, analyzing how the media portrays those who are presented as outsiders allows us to explore the prevalent discourse around the idea of Europeanness, as an “imagined community” (Anderson, 1983/2016) tied together by a certain view of European identity.

Methodological considerations

The analysis performed in this paper is part of a larger research project on ideologies regarding national and European identities in the Portuguese and German online media from 2011 to 2017. The appropriateness of the choice of Germany and Portugal as specific points of intersection between two Europes, Northern and Southern Europe, as a way of exploring how this idea of National identities is constructed, extends to the exploration of the construction of an idea of Europe, especially, taking into account the role of Germany in the context of the so-called refugee crisis, regarding these “non-European others”. Following a strategy of strategic selection and saturation (Frow & Morris, 2006), two media outlets were hall selected by country, according to their “social personalities” (Hall, Critcher, Jefferson, Clarke & Roberts, 1978, p. 60), namely selecting the most-read online tabloid and elite (Gossel, 2017; Chomsky, 1997), news outlets, at the time of the beginning of the data collection (Marktest, 2018, Schröder, 2018): Diário de Notícias (DN) and Correio da Manhã (CM), in Portugal, and Spiegel and Bild, in Germany, and uses a qualitative content analysis methodology (Bardin, 2007)¹. For this qualitative analysis, we conducted a strategic timeframe selection, around each of the legislative electoral periods in each country, as well as for the European Parliament elections. Elections are seen as particularly rich discursive contexts in which to study issues of identity and crisis, with political conflict and discourse heightened and media coverage on political issues more prolific. For these timeframes, and for each one of the news outlets, data collection started with an online search through the search engine Google, for strategically selected keywords filtered by date (according to the timeframes), which was completed by a second data search in the news outlets’ internal search engines and “related news” in the same timeframe\(^2\). The data was then filtered, in order to reach theoretical data saturation. From the final data selection, for the purpose of this paper, the articles referring to the “migration/refugee crisis” were selected.

To analyze the selected articles, we developed a model, based on Bardin’s (2007) content analysis and a combination of Stuart Hall’s Encoding, decoding (1993) model and his work on Policing the crisis (Hall et al., 1978). Our model consists of two sets of tables for each news outlet: the definer tables (in which each discourse is attributed to the sources or definers quoted in the articles), and the newspaper tables (in which the discourse is attributed directly to the newspaper as such). For every individual definer identified in each article, as well as for each media outlet, a table was created, in order to identify what is said about us/them in each context and time period. After this first analysis, we were able to group the discourses and draw relations between them, thus creating the categories and corresponding sub-categories and frames.

Who is the other?

This analysis allowed us to identify different main categories of discourses regarding the other, in relation to the so-called “refugee/migration crisis”. We identified three main categories of others: the muslim, the refugee, and the political/institutional other.
These others were framed in different ways. Regarding the “muslim other”, the only frame is “we are not Muslim”; regarding the “refugee other”, the main frames are that he “is welcome”, “is not welcome” and “is not our problem”, with a series of variations within these main frames; regarding the “political/institutional other”, the main identified frames are: “Europe of the Nation States”, “E.U. as the other”, and the “far right other”.

We will now lay out how these others are framed in the different media outlets, taking into account the sources, or definers, who are quoted, when applicable, and illustrating the frames with examples of the corresponding discourses. The data included in the tables is not an extensive reproduction of the analyzed data, but merely serves illustrative purposes.

\(^2\) In the case of Spiegel, which has articles in English, only the German articles were taken into consideration.
The Muslim other

We are not Muslim

This category draws on a symbolic representation of identity, naming the other, whether explicitly or implicitly, based on the axis of religion, understood in the broader sense as a symbolic cultural referent.

Germany is not Muslim

This discourse frames Germany as not being Muslim, or Islam as not being German, even though Muslim people reside in the country. This does not mean that the discourse explicitly rejects the possibility of Muslim presence, or “integration”, but, nevertheless, the underlying idea, is that it is not a part of the idea of us. It appears in Diário de Notícias (DN), Bild and Spiegel, at times, quoting, either directly or indirectly, definers from the German CDU and AfD (see list of political parties).

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | CDU     | Asked about the compatibility between Islam and German culture, the chancellor stressed that these are compatible realities as long as the German Constitution is respected. (Gouveia, 2017) | News article |
| AfD         | This is a question that goes beyond morality. Of course, anyone who accepts our values, our Constitution, is welcome, but we do not want within a few generations to have Sharia established here. (Hansel, 2017) | News article |
| AfD         | He [Gauland, AfD] does not defend the superiority of the Aryan race over the others but says that Germany should not receive Syrian refugees because, I quote, “Islam is not part of German culture” (Tadeu, 2017) | Opinion |
| Bild        | AfD     | Border closure! Stop immigration, deport refugees rigorously (“negative immigration”), reduce the brain drain. Burka-/minaret ban. No asylum without papers. No German passport for migrant children. (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |
| Spiegel     | Spiegel | Muslims living in Germany are less likely than most other EU countries to feel disadvantaged because of their skin color or origin – Germany is in the middle regarding discrimination because of religion. (Reimann & van Hove, 2017) | News article |

Table 1: “Germany is not Muslim”

Europe is not Muslim

The same type of frame can be also found regarding Europe's symbolic representation as not being Muslim. In this case, these frames can be found in CM, DN and Spiegel, and the quoted definers are representatives of the Portuguese PNR, an NGO, and opinion pieces (op-eds) by an academic and a journalist.
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | DN      | These results “completely discredit the claim that Muslims are not integrated into our societies” (DN, 2017) | News article |
| Portuguese journalist | Especially because Aylan was probably a Muslim – and we are afraid of Islam, and with reason. Especially because the “European leaders” we encourage know as much as we do. (Câncio, 2015) | Opinion |
| Portuguese academic | Religious differentiation, which is the most dangerous inspiration for terrorism ever remembered by the Twin Towers of New York, is present. (Moreira, 2015) | Opinion |
| CM          | PNR     | Islamic conquest of Europe. (CM, 2015) | News article |
| Spiegel     | Spiegel | EU study: more Muslims complain of discrimination because of their religion. (...) Particularly often headscarf or veil-wearing Muslim women reported from hostility to physical attacks. (Reimann & van Hove, 2017) | News article |

Table 2: “Europe is not Muslim”

PORTUGAL IS NOT MUSLIM

Almost absent from the discourse regarding Portugal, the issue of Islam is only raised by a representative of the PNR party, in Correio da Manhã.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| CM          | PNR     | On Wednesday, the National Renovator Party (PNR) warned, during a street raid in Lisbon in the late afternoon, against the “Islamic invasion” that threatens the country and Europe. (CM, 2015) | News article |

Table 3: “Portugal is not Muslim”

THE REFUGEE OTHER

Regarding “the Refugee” as other, we identified two main frames: the “is welcome” and the “is not welcome”. In each of those frames, different discourses present different justifications for why they are welcome, or not. They also vary, to an extent, depending on who is or isn’t welcoming them, namely, the government or civil society. It has an almost exclusive relevance in the context of Germany, as will be seen in the presented illustrative examples.

IS WELCOME: BY THE GERMAN GOVERNMENT

This discourse appears in all the analyzed media outlets. It presents the German government, or Angela Merkel specifically, as being welcoming to refugees arriving in the country. This policy is viewed mostly as positive, but not exclusively, since, at times, it is presented critically. The definers adopting this frame, aside from the media outlets, are a Portuguese diplomat and a representative of the German CDU, and journalists in opinion articles, in a positive tone, and critically, a representative of the AfD, as well as the German media.
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| CM          | CM      | Berlin has given exemplary support to these refugees. (Falcão-Machado, 2017) | Opinion |
| Bild        | Bild    | While states like Germany, Austria or even Sweden face up to the challenge, they show a great receptivity and welcome culture. (Bild, 2015) | News article |
| Spiegel     | CDU/German journalist | Now she is the refugee chancellor, who is outraged when she is accused of admitting too many refugees into the country: “I have to honestly say: if we have to start apologizing now that we show a friendly face in emergency situations, then this is not my country”. (Nelles, 2015) | Opinion |

Table 4: “The refugee other is welcome by the German government – positive tone”

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | AfD     | The refugee crisis, which is no natural disaster, is a crisis generated by Merkel’s hand (Hansel, 2017) | Interview |
| Bild        | Bild    | Is our German asylum law really an incentive for refugees to come to us? Asylum seekers in Germany receive accommodation, meals and up to 359 euros per month. (Bild, 2015) | News article |
| Spiegel     | Spiegel | Merkel must accept the accusation of having favored the rise of right-wing populists with her refugee policies. (Becker & Wiemann, 2017) | News article |

Table 5: “The refugee other is welcome by the German government – critical tone”

IS WELCOME: AS AN ECONOMIC ASSET

This type of discourse frames the arriving refugees as being potentially useful economically, i.e. instrumentalizing them as welcome, because they may be an economic asset, for the workforce. It appears in the German media outlets, having as definers representatives of Die Grünen, SPD and CDU/CSU as well as, in DN, in an op-ed by a Portuguese academic. At times, immigrants and refugees are seen as non-differentiated.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | Portuguese academic | Why wouldn’t Merkel take this opportunity for the entrance of a cheap, almost slave labor, who can certainly work at minimal prices in the German economy? Solidarity? I do not think so. (Almeida, 2015) | Opinion |
| Bild        | SPD     | The SPD still wants to take on refugees in need, specifically recruit skilled workers as needed. (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |
| CDU/CSU     | CDU/CSU | The Union [CDU/CSU] wants to control immigration "wisely" by a "skilled labor immigration law". (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |

Table 6: “The refugee other is welcome as an economic asset”
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media

Is welcome: as long as our “culture” is respected

This type of discourse is a conditional view of the welcoming policies: refugees are seen as welcome, but being an other, their presence is conditional regarding their “acceptance” of “our values” or “our culture”. Instead of using an essentialist symbolic representation-based othering, it uses a civic type of language to draw the othering line. It appears in the Portuguese media outlets, having as definers representatives of the German CDU, SPD and AfD.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | AfD     | Of course that whoever accepts our values, our Constitution, is welcome, but we do not want to have the Sharia established here within a few generations. (Hansel, 2017) | Interview |
| CM          | CDU     | Accepting German laws and values means “to tell the real name and country of origin to employers, not to fight, to have patience and to respect others, regardless of religion or gender.” (CM, 2015) | News article |
| Bild        | SPD     | Our values are not up for discussion. (...) In an open society, it does not matter if this society is ethnically homogenous, but if it has a shared value basis. (Bild, 2015) | News article |

Table 7: “The refugee other is welcome as long as our ‘culture’ is respected”

Immigration society

This type of discourse, inserted in the “Is welcome” category, frames German and European society as being, or urging it to be, solidary, and welcoming of migrants and/or refugees, as a feature of society itself. It appears in Bild and Diário de Notícias, and has as its definers representatives of the German parties Die Linke and Die Grünen, as well as a German supermarket chain.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | DN      | German supermarket removes foreign products to teach lesson against xenophobia (...) “we will be poorer without diversity”, said one of the posters placed on the empty shelves. (DN, 2017) | News article |
| Bild        | Die Linke | Die Linke wants to facilitate immigration (“solidary immigration society”). Specifically: Right to work, health and social care for all immigrants (not only those persecuted) after 3 months at the latest. (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |
|             | Die Grünen | “The Greens demand “safe and legal ways” to Germany, better family reunification” (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |

Table 8: “The refugee other: immigration society”
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

The “good” migrant

Inserted in the same category, this frame uses an anecdotal story in Diário de Notícias about a refugee, presenting a positive view through exemplification. It is interesting to note the contrast to the anecdotal story that will be referred to in the “is not welcome” category, by Correio da Manhã (CM, 2017), in the opposite sense.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | DN      | German police reported that a 16-year-old Iraqi refugee is in the process of receiving a reward for delivering a lost 14,000-euro handbag inside. (DN, 2017) | News article |

Table 9: “The refugee other: the ‘good’ migrant”

Is tragic: crisis

This frame, to some extent underlying the general coverage of the “crisis”, presents the situation of refugees, mainly Syrian, as a tragedy, and focuses on the horrors experienced, either in their homeland, or during the migratory process to Europe. It appears in Bild, Diário de Notícias and Spiegel, and its definers are an academics and a journalist, in op eds, and the German news outlets themselves.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | British academic | The powerful images of people traveling long distances on railways and motorways have created a general feeling of crisis in Europe. But much of this tragedy and chaos is preventable. (Betts, 2015) | Opinion |
| Bild        | Bild    | Miserable regions and in their desperation often do not fear the dangers of life to find a place of refuge with the perspective of a better life. (Bild, 2015) | News article |
| Spiegel     | Spiegel | Most of the asylum seekers in Germany have fled Russia, Syria, Afghanistan and Serbia, from persecution and hunger, from war, from fear of dying in their home countries. (Roth, 2013) | News article |

Table 10: “The refugee other is tragic: crisis”

Is tragic: European responsibility

The idea of tragedy and crisis is, as stated in the introduction, almost universally transversal to the discourses about refugees and migrants. However, there is one article which shows a breach in the hegemonic idea that the crisis is not caused by Europe. Even if still within the “tragedy frame” and presented as an “error”, or bad political tactic by Europe. It is in an op-ed by a Portuguese academic, in DN.
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

Table 11: “The refugee other is tragic: European responsibility”

IS NOT WELCOME

This category encompasses the discourses that frame refugees as not being welcome, in Germany or Portugal, both those that contradict the dominant discourse that they are being welcomed by the government (thus emphasizing that they are not as welcoming as portrayed), and those that directly claim that they should not be welcomed, for various reasons.

IN GERMANY: BY THE GOVERNMENT

This frame, as explained, challenges the previously outlined frame of the Germany government as being particularly “welcoming” in the face of the so-called refugee crisis. It appears in both the elite news outlets, Spiegel and Diário de Notícias, having as definers Spiegel and academics.

Table 12: “The refugee other is not so welcome in Germany: by the government”

IN GERMANY: BY CIVIL SOCIETY

This frame focuses on the ways in which civil society, in Germany, is not being welcoming to refugees, namely through electoral expression, among other demonstrations. It is a frame that is critical of such a posture, and appears, once again, in the elite media outlets, Spiegel and Diário de Notícias, with the same definers, adding the foreign press in a press review published in Spiegel.
Is a Threat: Security, Economy, Symbolic Representation

Differently than the two previous frames, that portray the negative attitude regarding refugees in a critical way, the three following frames represent the views of those who reject the presence of refugees, using a series of justifications, often bundled together: security, economy and symbolic representation of identity or culture.

The security defense, claiming that the arrival of refugees is a security threat, appears in Correio da Manhã, Bild and Diário de Notícias, having as definers, aside from the tabloid media outlets, a Portuguese diplomat (former ambassador) in an op-ed, a representative of the CSU, a representative of the AfD and a journalist in an interview.

In these discourses, closely tied to the two others in this frame, the economic threat of refugees is underlined. It appears in Correio da Manhã, Bild and Diário de Notícias, having as definers Bild, the same Portuguese diplomat in an op-ed and representatives of the AfD.
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | DN      | A supporter of the CDU, she thinks that “many people voted for AfD because they are afraid of refugees and think the state gives them more money than they do. It’s not true. The state helps all the people who are poor”. (Viegas, 2017) | Feature |
| CM          | Portuguese diplomat | Many are those who criticize such openness, as they fear the effects it will have on employment levels. (Falcão-Machado, 2017) | Opinion |
| Bild        | Bild, CDU | The government still wants to reduce the payment (...) The reason: “no false incentives should be set”. (Bild, 2015) | News article |

Table 15: “The refugee other is a threat to Germany: economy”

This type of discourse draws on symbolic representations of identity, or culture, to present refugees as a threat, specifically regarding Muslim refugees (adding to the aforementioned othering of “The Muslim”, in general). It appears in Correio da Manhã, Bild and Diário de Notícias, in the same discourses of the Portuguese diplomat and representatives of the AfD.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| CM          | Portuguese diplomat | Berlin has given exemplary support to these refugees, but many are those who criticize such openness, as they fear the effects it will have on (...) German identity. (Falcão-Machado, 2017) | Opinion |
| Bild        | AfD     | Burka/minaret ban. (Vehlewald, 2017) | News article |

Table 16: “The refugee other is a threat to Germany: symbolic representation”

IN PORTUGAL: THREAT

Regarding Portugal, this is the only category in which refugee “issue” appears, exclusively framing the other as a threat, using the triple symbolic, economic and security frame. It appears in Correio da Manhã, having a representative of PNR as a definer.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| CM          | PNR     | “We are the only party in Portugal that denounces this situation and warns of the danger that this represents against our internal security and against our identity”, claimed Pinto-Coelho, considering that the announced support for refugees “represents an affront, an offense” to many Portuguese people who “are not given a home, are not given subsidies”. (Lusa, 2015) | News article |

Table 17: “The refugee other is not welcome in Portugal: threat”
In Europe

Here we find discourses that present the European Union, and its main decision makers, as an institutional other, regarding the response to the “crisis”, criticizing the way in which the E.U. has handled the situation. It is a critical discourse that points to the hypocrisies in dealing with the “crisis”. They are conveyed by Bild and Diário de Notícias, having as definers, Bild, academic in op-eds and a former British Labour MP.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | Portuguese journalist | Especially because the reason why Aylan came to our beach is too complex, too difficult (who has a solution for Syria and ISIS, raise your arm), too contradictory to our vision of Europeans who despair at low birth rates but don’t want to nor dream of compensating it with non-Europeans. Even because hosting and integrating the Aylans costs money. (Câncio, 2015) | Opinion |
|             | British academic | Europe needs a clear strategy on who it wants to protect and where and how to assess people’s asylum applications. (Betts, 2015) | Interview |
|             | Portuguese academic | It is almost impossible – unfortunately – to fail to observe how the hypocrisy of realpolitik and the world of geopolitical and political interests intersect for (...) offer an even more inhumane dimension to this tragedy. (Almeida, 2015) | Opinion |
| Bild        | Bild      | But whether such images of misery, helplessness and exhaustion, created on European soil, will really be a thing of the past here depends very much on whether the European Union finally manages to agree on a common refugee policy. (Bild, 2015) | News article |

Table 18: “The refugee other is not welcome in Europe”

Is not our problem

The only other instance in which Portugal appears, in relation to the refugee crisis, in the analyzed data, is, in fact, to frame the issue as virtually non-existent in Portugal, due to the absence of migrants or refugees. It appears in Correio da Manhã, having a representative of the PSD as a definer.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| CM          | PSD     | “In Portugal we have no reason to have the kind of concerns that are felt in Germany and in the center of Europe, which have been particularly sought after by movements of refugees”, he [Pedro Passos Coelho] said. (CM, 2017) | News article |

Table 19: “The refugee other is not our problem”
De-othering: representation

Regarding the two first others, the Muslim and the Refugee, the non-European or external others, there are only two instances in which these others are the definers. Both are feature stories by Diário de Notícias, set in Germany, in which the other is heard when writing about the issue of refugees and migration, namely a representative of a Turkish Community association, and a Syrian refugee who works as a tour guide in Berlin.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type   |
|-------------|---------|-------|--------|
| DN          | Representative Türkische Gemeinde in Deutschland | Cihan Sinanoglu, a spokesman for the organization, says the same. “We always knew that there was a potential here for the extreme right of 20%, which previously could be contained by the CDU and the SPD. Now, with immigration and refugees, the situation has gotten out of control. There is racism and, for this, some will vote for AfD, which in my view is a party that did not accept globalization. But there are also those who vote out of fear or fatigue of the big parties”, says the 34-year-old German of Turkish origin. (Viegas, 2017) | Feature |
| Syrian refugee | Syrian refugee, DN | Mohamad fled because he did not want to serve in Assad’s army. In Germany, he studies and takes guided tours comparing the history of Germany and Syria. (…) The tour, which lasts two hours, then ends with a visit to a Syrian restaurant “this is where, in 1953, people displeased with the GDR communist regime protested”, explains Mohamad, to a group that includes people from the United Kingdom, Switzerland, Poland, Uzbekistan, Lithuania etc... Along the way, parallels between the history of Germany and Syria are established, “do you see Checkpoint Charlie? In Syria, checkpoints are something very present in everyday life. It is something that may seem strange to you. But it is something that intimidates. It causes fear”, recalls the Syrian, who just received a scholarship to study Economics and Political Science. (Viegas, 2017) | Feature |

Table 20: “De-othering”

The political/institutional other

In this category, we encompassed those discourses that other either political institutions or political ideologies, in relation to the “refugee/migration crisis”. There is an othering of other European countries/governments and of European institutions, regarding their response to the “crisis”, as well as an othering of the far right.

Europe of the Nation States

This frame portrays a division within the European Union, between countries that are welcoming to refugees in contrast to those who are not, or criticizing an alleged unequal distribution of resettlement efforts. It appears in the German media, Bild and Spiegel, having as definers the news outlets themselves, as well as a representative of the SPD and a German journalist, in an op-ed.
Migrants, refugees and othering: constructing europeanness. An exploration of Portuguese and German media. Rita Himmel & Maria Manuel Baptista

Other EU states, such as Hungary, are presenting themselves from an ugly side and are putting their faith in a martial deterrent policy, without compassion. (Bild, 2015)

Asylum applications should be submitted before entry into the EU, asylum seekers distributed “fairly” in Europe. (Vehlewald, 2017)

In refugee policy, Europe is experiencing a return of nation states that have their own interests in view, at the cost of European values. (…) In the dispute over a refugee quota, a majority of EU states simply overruled dissenters from Eastern Europe. (Deggerich, Müller, Popp, Puhl, Ulrich, Wiedmann-Schmidt & Wilkens, 2015)

Should it have been the Chancellor’s calculation that the neighbors would make an example of our charity, she has thoroughly miscalculated. We are becoming more and more lonely. (Fleischhauer, 2015)

The xenophobe other

The far-right they

This category others the far-right, as not being part of the idea of us, as a “shock”, and as something that must be fought against. It is used by Correio da Manhã, Diário de Notícias and Spiegel, having as definers news agencies, DN and Spiegel, representatives of the CSU and the European Comission, academics, intellectuals and journalists in op-eds. It is quite a recurrent discourse, so just a few illustrative examples will be listed.

Nationalist and Eurosceptic movements that support the formation of forces opposed to Europeans of unity cannot be ignored, affirming the risk of European cultural values and of Europe’s very identity. (Moreira, 2015)

Shouting “all of Berlin hates the Nazis”, or “the Nazis” or “racism is not an alternative”, the quite young demonstrators showed their revolt. (CM, 2017)

These differences, as I see it, are above all the history of Nazi Germany and thus the responsibility before the Holocaust, a basic social consensus that was staged again after the reunification of Germany with the Holocaust memorial in the middle of Berlin, but that has lost more and more of its naturalness in recent years. (Diez, 2017)

Neo-Nazis harm our homeland. (Roth, 2013)
The far-right in them

Regarding Germany, there are instances in which the far-right is represented as being, in fact, part of the identity, and not a shock, or alien. However, this appears only in the Portuguese media, and is still an instance of othering, since it is a case of a Portuguese intellectual describing German society in an op-ed in DN, and, in the case of two feature stories in Berlin, by the same media outlet, the interviewed people are either othering far-right Germans as East Germans, or the example of the aforementioned refugee living in Berlin. In the case of Spiegel, this discourse appears in foreign press review.

| News outlet | Definer | Quote | Type |
|-------------|---------|-------|------|
| DN          | Portuguese intellectual | The neo-Nazi nationalism of AfD is a problem of “normality” in overdose. (Marques, 2017) | Opinion |
| DN          | Charlotte is not surprised. “I think there was always a racist base in German society that now sees AfD as what it has always wanted. In Saxony it is like that. I don’t see myself going back there. People in Saxony are afraid of what is normal here in Kreuzberg. A mixture of all” (Viegas, 2017) | Feature |
| Spiegel     | Foreign press | “Country from which the Nazi terror once originated”; “Germany is no longer a “holy special case”, the “moral superiority” to its European neighbors and the USA will, therefore, “decrease rapidly”. (Der Spiegel, 2017) | News article |

Table 23: “The political/institutional other: the xenophobe other – the far right in them”

Who are we?

Even though there are different discourses about migrants and refugees in the media, the othering process in itself is hegemonic. There are only two instances in which the migrant or refugee is not talked about but talked to, as a definer in the media articles. This is particularly impactful in the case of the feature story in which a Syrian refugee establishes, through the reference to material historically charged heritage, a rapprochement between us and them (Viegas, 2017). This paradox of an idea of Europe as internally diverse, but with clear barriers to this diversity, based on a certain European symbolic sameness, becomes evident in these discourses.

There seems to be a higher possibility for empathy, for bridging the us/them divide, in feature stories, where the journalist has direct contact with non-hegemonic definers. This idea that feature stories open up the possibility for counter-hegemonic discourses, nevertheless, does not necessarily eliminate the ideological framework behind the “journalistic common sense” theorized in Hall et al. (1978) model of the dimensions of feature news values. As the authors point out, the “move to feature”, the “[a]ssessment of events as having a background not covered by hard news story”, with the ideological function of placing “the events and the actors on a ‘map’ of society”, could in the general coverage by the media outlet, end up playing the part of “[r]eintegration of feature into paper’s dominant discourse”, in which the media make “the event and its implications ‘manageable’, i.e. not destructive of, or demanding changes in, [the] basic structure of society” (Hall et al., 1978, p. 99). This dynamic analysis that is contingent on data divided according to the coverage by newspaper is outside the scope of this paper, but needs, nonetheless, to be considered when regarding these preliminary conclusions.

Another discourse that appears to be hegemonic, and in line with the theoretical basis for this study (El-Tayeb, 2011; Nawyn, 2018) is the one that frames migration and the “refugee crisis” as such, as a crisis, and one that is independent from European history and policies. Its causes and consequences are only seen as a European responsibility, at best, in a human rights or solidarity frame, never as an actual political and historical responsibility nor connection. At the most, the situation in the countries of origin is seen as “too complex, too difficult” (Câncio, 2015), and, in the one case where European responsibility is mentioned (Moreira, 2015), it is still in the frame of European exceptionalism. As Fatima El-Tayeb points out, in her critical analysis of the discourses used by the Museum of Europe to represent Europeanness:

>a number of questions such as “what policies are needed to offer immigrants perspectives while preventing an upset of the demographic, economic, and cultural balance of the host nations? How should we react to the daily horrors of people risking their lives to reach the promised land called Europe?” frame migration as a new and urgent crisis, detached from the continent’s “hour zero” and the resulting need for cheap labor, decolonization, or “the fall of the wall,” resulting in a mass migration from East to West-instead forever suddenly appearing on the horizon of an unsuspecting Europe that feels obliged to react, within sensible limits, due to its commitment to human rights, not because it already is an active, powerful participant in the process. (El-Tayeb, 2011, p. 166)

Regarding the political othering process, the hegemonic discourse is based on the idea that the far-right is intrinsically non-European or anti-European, a diametrically opposed other, that has to be eliminated because it logically does not belong. Regarding Europe as a whole, the presence of the far-right is seen as an outlier, a “shock”, a logical glitch in the system of Europeanism. This contrasts with the, at times, critical stances taken in relation to the othering of non-Europeans as part of the lack of appropriate policies, which, nonetheless, is a discourse that does not see far right ideas as part of us, even if the far-right history, especially Nazi history in Germany, is referred to and mentioned. Europe is framed as having a set of common values, and movements and ideas that go against these values, such as the far-right, are seen as a “shock”, an “abnormality”, as if they are intrinsically not possible in Europe. Far-right supporters are Eastern Europe, ill-informed people, fearmongers – not “real Europeans”. Even when there is a criticism of xenophobia or islamophobia, it is under the assumption that these are un-European, that they have been overcome, on the “European ideology of colorblindness” (El-Tayeb, 2011, p. 177). A small breach in this commonsensical approach appears in the op-ed by a German journalist, when it is explicitly said that this consensus has “has lost more and more of its naturalness in recent years” (Diez, 2017), but, again, this is a shock, and the idea of consensus is the starting point.

As the collected data point out, there is not only a construction of the idea of Europe in which migrants or refugees are the other, even when talking about their “integration”, but also of an idea of Europe that is intrinsically incompatible with far-right or xenophobic ideas and movements. Being European, thus, is narrated as being not a Muslim, not a refugee, and not xenophobic.

Aside from the general initial conclusions we have outlined in this exploratory study, further analysis would benefit from delving deeper into the dynamic interplay between variables, such as the definers, and the identified frames, merely mentioned here, which is being carried out in the doctoral research project that this paper integrates. Further exploration of the data should take into account the coverage discriminated by each media outlet, as well as by definer, type of article and other potentially relevant variables, as well as the dynamic relations between them.

We believe the context of “crisis” proved to be, as expected, a particularly rich one in which to explore processes of othering, that, although, in this case, are only being explored in the discursive arena, have very real practical, political, social, economic consequences. The othering of the “tragic” refugee, whose “jettisoned life is thus saturated in power, though not with modes on entitlement or obligation” (Butler & Spivak, 2007, p. 32), is precisely one of the modes in which the imagined community of the State, or the supranational European Union, are discursively produced as a homogenous whole, separating who belongs and who doesn’t, and defining degrees of acceptability of different lives.

Translation: Rita Himmel

Acknowledgements

Doctoral grant from the Fundação para a Ciência e Tecnologia (FCT) (ref. SFRH/BD/123609/2016). Financial support from FCT under the National Funds of MCTES and FSE.

References

Anderson, B. (1983/2016). Imagined communities: reflections on the origin and spread of nationalism. London, Brooklyn: Verso.
Bardin, L. (2007). Análise de conteúdo. Lisbon: Edições 70.

Bird, S. E. & Dardenne, R. W. (1999). Mito, registo e “estórias”: explorando as qualidades narrativas nas notícias. In N. Traquina (Ed.), Jornalismo: questões, teorias e “estórias” (pp. 263-277). Lisbon: Vega.

Butler, J. & Spivak, G. C. (2007). Who sings the Nation-State? London, New York, Calcutta: Seagull Books.

Chomsky, N. (1997). What makes mainstream media mainstream. Retrieved from chomsky.info/199710

El-Tayeb, F. (2011). European others: queering ethnicity in postnational Europe. Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press.

European Union. (2020). MEPs. European Parliament. Retrieved from https://www.europarl.europa.eu/meps/en/search/table Frow, J. & Morris, M. (2006). Estudos Culturais. In N. K. Denzin & Y. S. Lincoln (Eds.), O planejamento da pesquisa qualitativa: teorias e abordagens (2nd ed.) (pp. 315-343). Porto Alegre: Artmed.

Geary, P. J. (2013). A Europe of nations. Or the nation of Europe: origin myths past and present. Lusophone Journal of Cultural Studies, 1(1), 36-49. https://doi.org/10.21814/rlec.5

Gossel, D. (2017). Tabloid journalism. Encyclopaedia Brittanica. Retrieved from: www.britannica.com/topic/tabloid-journalism Hall, S. (1993). Encoding, decoding. In S. During (Ed.), The Cultural Studies reader (pp. 90-103). London, New York: Routledge.

Hall, S., Critcher, C., Jefferson, T., Clarke, J. & Roberts, B. (1978). Policing the crisis: mugging, the state, and law and order. London: MacMillan.

Marktest. (2018). Ranking netscope de tráfego web Dezembro 2017. Retrieved from https://www.marktest.com/wap/a/n/id~233c.aspx

Nawyn, S. J. (2018). Refugees in the United States and the politics of crisis. In C. Menjívar; M. Ruiz & I. Ness (Eds.), The oxford handbook of migration crises. https://doi.org/10.1093/oxfordhb/9780190856908.013.23

Partido Nacional Renovador. (2009, December 02). Criação da “Aliança dos Movimentos Nacionais Europeus”. Retrieved from http://www.pnr.pt/2009/12/roma-criacao-da-alianca-dos-movimentos-nacionais-europeus/

Pieterse, J. N. (1991/1993). Fictions of Europe. In A. Gray & J. McGuigan (Eds.), Studying culture: an introductory reader (pp. 225-231). London: Edward Arnold.

Schröder, J. (2018, January 09). IVW-News-Top-50: Bild, upday, Welt und stern wachsen trotz Feiertagen gegen den Trend. Meedia. Retrieved from https://meedia.de/2018/01/09/ivw-news-top-50-bild-upday-welt-und-stern-wachsen-trotz-feiertagen-gegen-den-trend/

Appendix 1 - Political Parties

List of the mentioned political parties, grouped by European Parliament Political Group in 2020 (European Union, 2020):
Biographical notes

Rita Himmel is a doctoral student in the Cultural Studies Doctoral Programme, at the University of Aveiro, and a FCT fellow, developing a research project at the intersection of the areas of Political Science and Media Studies, under the perspective of Cultural Studies, on identities, ideology and media discourses in Europe. In addition to publications on this topic, she has also focused on gender and performance issues. With a degree in Communication Sciences (2010) from the Faculty of Arts and Humanities of University of Porto, she completed the Master of Science in “Political Science: International Relations” at the University of Amsterdam (2013). Before her academic career, she worked as a journalist and in the field of communications. Currently, she is part of the “Globalization and Identities” and “Gender and Performance” projects of the Research Group Between Cultures of the Center for Languages, Literatures and Cultures of the University of Aveiro.

ORCID: https://orcid.org/0000-0003-1658-2087
Email: rita.himmel@ua.pt
Address: Departamento e Línguas e Culturas, Universidade de Aveiro, Campus Universitário de Santiago, 3810-193 Aveiro (Portugal)

Maria Manuel Baptista is Full Professor at the University of Aveiro, with “Agregação” in Cultural Studies, at the University of Minho (2013). She has diverse and extensive work published nationally and internationally, with an emphasis on the area of Cultural Studies. She is President of IRENNE – Association for Research, Prevention and Combat of Violence and Exclusion. She is the coordinator of GECE - Gender and Performance Group and NECO – Group of Studies in Culture and Leisure at the University of Aveiro. She is the editor of the collection “Género e Performance: Textos Essenciais”. Her research interests include issues of identity and globalization as well as migration and post-colonialism.

ORCID: https://orcid.org/0000-0002-1465-4393
Email: mbaptista@ua.pt
Address: Departamento e Línguas e Culturas, Universidade de Aveiro, Campus Universitário de Santiago, 3810-193 Aveiro (Portugal)

Submitted: 10/04/2020
Accepted: 12/05/2020