1. INTRODUCTION
In today's globalized world, diverse business entities face numerous obstacles in order to remain competitive. Human resources must continue to evolve and innovate, as they are critical to a company's success. Bangun (2012) believes that a company cannot succeed without qualified people. To be successful, companies must educate their employees so that they understand their duties and responsibilities (Firmandari, 2014). As a consequence, the company has developed a training and development plan for each employee. According to Simamora (2004), “preparation is a systematic process for modifying how representatives behave in order to accomplish authoritative aims”. Preparation provides an environment conducive to representatives acquiring or learning explicit job perspectives, abilities, information, as well as methods of behaving (Haryanto et al., 2000). Preparation is typically focused on providing workers with defined capabilities or assisting them in correcting performance inadequacies. Therefore, preparing is a brief instructional cycle in which representatives of activities learn functionally relevant abilities in a methodical manner.

Progress is a protracted instructional engagement in which administrative personnel acquire systematic authority through the use of novel and speculative concepts. The organization frequently advances by performing a training program that is directly related to the most prevalent work practices in current or future job training in terms of talents, qualities, and behaviors (Kaswan, 2011). Improvements were developed to provide more information and skills to ensure representatives' professional success (Muardi et al., 2022). Progress may also be defined as understanding how to support representatives in developing, further developing the implementation of workers' responsibilities in order to advance the position or positions of employees in the future. At this time, it is envisaged that companies will be able to put plans in place to attract and retain top-tier human resources. Administration of the organization can improve in this case by improving human assets as an example.

According to Mangkunegara, implementation refers to work that produces both quality and quantity that can be fulfilled by a representative in carrying out his given responsibilities. A pioneer is critical in an association or organization, as the initiative variable can have an effect on the representation of representatives in the association or organization they head. Additionally, Uno & Lamatengo (2014) demonstrated that the presentation plays a key role in administration and association. Because development in company management is not totally dependent on execution (Kaswan, 2011). This means that if a person works for an organization, his presentation is the creation of a manner of doing and practicing that is entirely consistent with the organization's ideas or goals.

According to Law No. 14 of 1967, a monetary foundation is defined as a service that performs training in the monetary sector, with the purpose of withdrawing cash from the general public and distributing it back to the regions. Regular banking and Islamic banking are used as frameworks. Islamic banks are financial institutions that conduct their operations in accordance with sharia and Islamic principles. Islamic finance operates in accordance with Islamic laws, most notably the Qur'an and Hadith. Particularly the philosophical foundation and reflection involved in developing and discovering Islamic finance concepts. Because adhering to Qur'anic norms ensures the bank's required equity and balance and keeps the business functioning smoothly.

Preparation and improvement begin when an individual joins an association or organization and remains a member for the duration of his or her career with that association or organization (Leatemia, 2018). Both new and existing staff receive training. In Bank Syariah Indonesia in Medan Adam Malik branch office, new workers undergo one year of training before receiving an employee certificate, referred to as trainee employees. Trainees are educated in a variety of fields, not just one. To ensure proficient and robust asset usage, preparatory and progress programs must adapt to job changes and coordinate long-term plans using hierarchical strategies. Preparation and progress are vital components of the association's commitment since they can act as a problem solver for members (Ardhansyah & Dwi, 2020). Improvement and preparation can serve as a means or tool for mobilizing or integrating critical hierarchical attributes, establishing an authoritative culture, and endowing individuals or groups with authoritative central capacities. According to experts, adequacy means the following:

a. According to Hidayat, adequacy is an action that indicates the extent to which objectives (quantity, quality, and time) have been met. The more visible the level of achievement, the greater the viability.

b. According to Prasetyo Budi Saksono, viability is a way to achieve a large degree of relationship between results and normal results from various data sources (Effendy, 1993).
As a result of the foregoing understanding, it can be concluded that a sign of feasibility in the sense of attaining a specified objective or goal is an estimate of the point at which a goal has been reached in line with what has been intended. Standards of preparation and improvement. Every time an incompetent representative gains expertise it is clear he is facing a complicated learning process (Tulus, 1996). The different rules that are useful as a rule during the time spent developing abilities, information and mentality are as follows:

1. Inspiration
   The higher a person's inspiration, the faster and more sincerely he will master other skills or information. Preparation must have something to do with the goals to be achieved (cash prizes, positions, recognition, advancements, and so on).
2. Progress report
   There is a relationship between specificity and how much progress is made with the speed and continuity of learning. However, care must be taken not to provide data that can be confusing.
3. Statement
   At the time of choice has asked for rewards by giving rewards and discipline. Progress, raises, and praise are positive statements.
4. Exercise
   To have the choice to completely dominate an ability, information or disposition, one's dynamic interest is fundamental. The time span between preparation periods that is carefully and firmly controlled is highly conducive to continuous learning.
5. Whole versus piece by piece
   The longer and more complex a work is, the more suitable it is to display it section by section. Thus, inspiring students is generally important for a mentor.
6. Individual contrast
   Preparing is often wiser, but the facts do confirm that individuals differ in knowledge and abilities. Therefore, the best preparation is one that matches the speed and complexity to the single capacity of the members.

2. RESEARCH METHOD
   This study uses a subjective exploration strategy for significance, the type of information involved by experts in this study is a significant type of subjective information. Subjective means one type of information that makes sense for the researcher to lead this exploration. This study uses a subjective information investigation procedure with information obtained from interviews. According to Slamet, the idea (Interview) is a technique used to obtain data through social interaction activities between the analysts being studied. The meeting guidelines used are as diagrams of possible problems. Interviews were conducted with employees of Bank Syariah Indonesia of Medan Adam Malik branch office.
   Concentrated writing on the study of Literature is a logical article that contains judgments from various experts on a problem, which is then dissected, analyzed, and made a decision. The sorting of information is completed by using books, writings or library materials, then taking notes or quoting the judgments of the experts in the book.

Analysts select only certain individuals or sources that scientists think can provide the data specialists need. The creator directed organized interviews with representatives regarding preparations and progress in further development of executions at PT Bank Syariah Indonesia of Medan Adam Malik branch office.
