Covid-19 and population mental health in perspective

Sandro Galea

1Public Health, Boston University, Boston, USA
Contact: sgalea@bu.edu

COVID-19 was accompanied by an increase in common mood-anxiety disorders in populations worldwide. This increase is consistent with what has been observed after other prior large-scale disasters but is larger in scale, scope, and duration. This has important implications both for our understanding of population mental health, and for how we may mitigate the mental health consequences of large-scale events.