Novel hybrid CHC from β-carboline and N-hydroxyacrylamide overcomes drug-resistant hepatocellular carcinoma by promoting apoptosis, DNA damage, and cell cycle arrest

Jiefei Miao\textsuperscript{a,b,c}, Chi Meng\textsuperscript{c}, Hongmei Wu\textsuperscript{c}, Wenpei Shan\textsuperscript{c}, Haoran Wang\textsuperscript{c}, Changchun Ling\textsuperscript{a}, Jinlin Zhang\textsuperscript{a,b,}, Tao Yang\textsuperscript{a,c,}

\textsuperscript{a}The Affiliated Hospital of Nantong University, Nantong University, Nantong 226001, PR China;
\textsuperscript{b}Department of Pharmacy, Affiliated Cancer Hospital of Nantong University, Nantong University, Nantong 226361, PR China.
\textsuperscript{c}School of Pharmacy and Jiangsu Province Key Laboratory for Inflammation and Molecular Drug Target, Nantong University, Nantong 226001, PR China.

Table of contents:

UV-visible absorption spectra of SAHA and harmine in the presence of increasing amounts of CT DNA……………………………………………………………………….S2
1. UV-visible absorption spectra of SAHA and harmine in the presence of increasing amounts of CT DNA. Arrows indicate the changes in absorbance with increasing the concentration of DNA.