Supplementary Materials: Condensing Effect of Cholesterol on hBest1/POPC and hBest1/SM Langmuir Monolayers

Pavel Videv 1, Nikola Mladenov 1,2, Tonya Andreeva 3,4, Kirilka Mladenova 1, Veselina Moskova-Doumanova 1, Georgi Nikolaev 1, Svetla D. Petrova 1 and Jordan A. Doumanov 1,*

1 Faculty of Biology, Sofia University “St. Kliment Ohridski”, 8 Dragan Tzankov Blvd., 1164 Sofia, Bulgaria; pvidev@biofac.uni-sofia.bg (P.V.); nikola.mladenov@abv.bg (N.M.); k_mladenova@biofac.uni-sofia.bg (K.M.); moskova@biofac.uni-sofia.bg (V.M.-D.); gn_georgiev@uni-sofia.bg (G.N.); spetrova@biofac.uni-sofia.bg (S.D.P.)
2 Faculty of Medicine, Medical University-Sofia, 1 Sv. Georgi Sofiiski Str., 1431 Sofia, Bulgaria
3 Institute of Biophysics and Biomedical Engineering, Bulgarian Academy of Sciences, Acad. G. Bonchev Str., Bl. 21, 1113 Sofia, Bulgaria; t_andreeva@abv.bg
4 Faculty of Applied Chemistry, Reutlingen University, Alteburgstraße 150, 72762 Reutlingen, Germany
* Correspondence: doumanov@biofac.uni-sofia.bg; Tel.: +359 2 8167262

Figure S1. BAM images of (A) POPC/Chol monolayers, (B) SM/Chol monolayers (at molar ratios of Chol 0.167; 0.285; 0.375; 0.444 and 0.5) in the presence or absence of Ca²⁺ at 35 ± 2 °C. The white scale bar = 100 μm.